Bend the Trade Center.

In view of the especially good crops that are being grown in the Powell Buttes section this year, it can be readily seen that that territory some day will be one of the most fertile sections of the Deschutes valley. Grain crops exceeding all expectations are being harvested; six tons to the acre is being cut from alfalfa fields; and potatoes and roots of all kinds are yielding prolifically. The Powell Butte section is living up to the good things that have been predicted concerning it.

This has no small bearing on Bend's future development. When settled and developed this section will consist of thousands of productive acres. The cultivation that has been accomplished is only a scratch on the surface. Practically all of the trade from the buttes now goes to Prineville. The county seat is the nearest trading point and the flour mill there provides a market at a fair price for the farmers' grain. These are two quite sufficient reasons why the butte farmers look to Prineville as their trading center. But this condition of affairs will be reversed when the railroad reaches Bend, which now is assured within two years at the latest. Then the natural grain and livestock market for all the fertile section around Powell Buttes will be at Bend. The building of a railroad through a section always readjusts, to a greater or less degree, the trading centers throughout that section. The same thing will happen in Central Oregon, and the business around the buttes will find its logical market at Bend.

It would be very difficult to compute the amount of this business—the acreage is so extensive and the soil so fertile. In that portion that comes under the Central Oregon canal and known in the D. I. & P. Co.'s offices as "the shoestring," there are 12,000 acres. This is only a blot on the map when one considers all the land lying in that section. On those 12,000 acres there will be from 250 to 300 families, with many others on the land adjoining and on part of the Oregon Irrigation segregation that extends out east into that territory. These figures give only a small idea of the tons of farm produce that will be raised in that section; of the hundreds of head of livestock that will be fattened for market; and of the vast quantities of boots, shoes, hats, caps, clothing and groceries that will be required by its prosperous farmers. When all this is considered, it can be seen readily how great an influence the trade of the Powell Buttes section will play in the growth and development of Bend.

COMMENT BY OTHER PAPERS

Portland's Tempest.
Burr's Times-Herald.

The Portland politicians just now remind us of some classes of women at a reception in a country town given to some celebrity. Mayor Simon, Theodore Wilcox, Little Doc Wetherbee and a few more fellows who think they are some "punkins," are torn with jealousy because President Taft has consented to be a guest of Senator Bourne during a part of his stay in Portland, and Mayor Joe, at the dictation of Wilcox and Wetherbee has telegraphed that Portland is unwilling to share with any individual the honor of the president's entertainment. Mayor Joe was United States senator once himself, and was snubbed and ignored in Washington, so he cannot bear to see a successor basking in the sunshine of presidential recognition. Wilcox is a man who covets the senatorial toga but wishes it handed to him for two bits, and Doc Wetherbee is a bright little bantam rooster who thinks he is the only strutter in the barnyard that is worth noticing. These politicians, anxious to discredit and destroy the primary law, are willing to sacrifice the interests of the state at Washington to gratify their political spleen and open a way if possible to a return of the system by which they dictated in all the affairs of Oregon for so long. Senator Bourne, as the exponent of the people's rights in the choice of officials, must be squelched at any cost and the Oregonian is the trumpeter for the gang that is pledged to the job.

The Enemies of Direct Primaries.
Saturday Evening Post.

There will, of course, be a direct primary law in New York. Probably there will be such a law in every state. Enough is known of the workings of the system to show that it isn't any patent, automatic, political renovating machine. In Wisconsin, for example, direct primaries have made elections more expensive than ever before—so expensive that some observers say a poor man is practically barred from an important office. In Illinois about the same men won at the primaries who would have won at old-fashioned conventions. The primary, indeed, seems to have played into the hands of the hard-pressed bosses by enabling them to plump gang democratic votes for gang republican candidates. Nearly everywhere defects appear. Some will be cured and some will not.

Yet, undoubtedly, the direct primary idea grows in the affections of the people. If you wish to know the reason don't bother about details of its working in this place and that, but just look at the men who, everywhere, are head and front of the opposition to it. That alone will settle the question. Thanks to long and painful experience, the popular inclination to get on the opposite side of the fence from the most determined foes of the direct primaries has become almost an instinct.
