JURIES IN ENGLAND.

They Get Through Their Work Quickly and With Little Fuss.

The working of the British jury system exhibits a marked contrast with that of our own. It is possible that my experience in British courts was exceptional, but in not a single instance did I see a juror challenged or rejected. In all of the courts requiring juries the necessary number of men were present, and they were sworn in without question. In the sheriff's deputy court in Scotland the presiding judge gave notice to the jury that he expected to adjourn the court at 2 o'clock and stated that if they could all remain until that hour he would at once dismiss the men who had been called for a second panel. The jurors conferred together and decided to remain till 1 o'clock, whereupon the judge notified the other men to appear at 12:30. The one jury impaneled for the morning session rendered six verdicts in cases involving prosecutions for theft, fraud and burglary.

In the court of quarter sessions at Taunton, England, I saw a single jury in one day render eleven verdicts. I found that it was customary in the several sorts of court that I attended for the same jury to act in successive cases. In no instance did I see a jury leave their seats to make up their verdict. Usually the issue before them was made so plain that all who gave attention knew in advance what the decision would be. I made note of an exceptional instance of delay when the court was forced to wait nine minutes for the report of the jury. In this case the judge who gave the instructions was himself in doubt as to what the verdict ought to be.

A Scottish jury consists of fifteen persons, and a majority may render a verdict. In England the number is twelve, and unanimity is required. But I noted no difference as to practical results in the two countries. The twelve men in the English jury were as prompt and certain in their action as were the eight out of fifteen in the Scottish jury.—McClure's Magazine.

A Hot Spot.

"I believe that Monterey, Mexico, is the hottest spot in the world in the daytime," said an Arizona man. "I have seen the thermometer register as high as 120 degrees in the late afternoon. It was so hot that the natives who ventured on the streets would hug the foot wide shade of the low buildings like lichen clings to tree bark. But here's the funny part of it: When the sun sets it begins to cool off, and at night it is positively necessary to sleep under blankets. The nights are delightfully cool, and I presume it is because one is able to get a good sleep that it is possible to live in that climate."—Washington Post.

OLD PIONEER SETTLES HERE.

Almost Eighty, Takes Homestead. Will Grow Up With Country.

William A. Offield, seventy-five years young, drove in to Bend from Hood River some weeks ago, looked the country over, liked it, and forthwith took up a 320-acre homestead in the sage brush country to the southeast.

The old pioneer is as full of enthusiasm as he was "way back in the fifties" when he first came to Oregon. Then, he says, he saw Portland when it was smaller than Bend now is, and had the opportunity to buy acreage in the heart of the present city at prices which now could not purchase country property ten miles distant. Also he had a hand in the founding of Roseburg and Walls Walla, and declares that now he has come to Central Oregon to be in at the making of the big cities of the interior, greatest of all of which he predicts as Bend.

The septogenarian homeseeker has located on land 79 miles from Bend. There he is living with a small tent as his only shelter, and a sagebrush shack as a sort of storehouse. However, he declares that before many years have passed his will be suburban property, and neighboring ranches and towns will crowd thick about him. One of the instances of his first advent to the new land was that when he got out there he discovered that he required a pickaxe with which to make a well, and to get one returned the 79 miles to Bend. It is his intention to "stay with" his land and grow up with the country.
