WEATHER REPORT

RECORDS ON THE DESCHUTES

Temperature Must Go Down to 26 Degrees to Be Harmful to Crops—Ordinary Frosts Do Little Injury.

In an official report upon the climate of the Deschutes Valley, prepared by Edward A. Beals, district forecaster at Portland, and just issued by the Department of Agriculture at Washington, a great deal of important information appears. In addition to the facts about temperature and moisture there is an intelligent general statement of conditions here, accompanied by maps and reproductions of photographic views, and conclusions of much value to those trying to develop the country. For home example, here is a paragraph under the sub-heading "Historical and Descriptive":

The first white people to explore the Deschutes Valley were those under the command of Col. John C. Fremont in 1843. This party left The Dalles in November and traveled south to California. They passed through the Deschutes Valley, and the Walker Mountains were named by Col. Fremont after the army officer who directed him to make the journey. Irrigation in a small way has been carried on in the neighborhood of Prineville for many years, but no attention was given to this subject in other parts of the valley until about eight years ago, when extensive projects under the Carey Act were started in the neighborhood of Bend. There are now several thousand acres of land in the Deschutes Valley being irrigated and more will soon be ready. The principal ditches now in operation are the Finley ditch near Rosland, the Central Oregon, Pilot Butte and Columbia Southern ditches near Bend, and the Carmichael ditch at Prineville. To those who wish to live on the land and cultivate it thousands of acres are open to settlement, and it is expected that in a short while the large sheep and cattle ranches will be things of the past and that small farms devoted to the raising of grain, alfalfa and vegetables will take their places.

After reference to the railroad construction and a brief sketch of the physical characteristics of the country, a number of the established towns are mentioned and this statement follows:

There is no question but this country, which is larger than the State of New Jersey, offering such exceptional advantages from an agricultural and manufacturing standpoint, will soon become well populated and the seat of numerous industrial activities.

In view of the tendency to laud or condemn overmuch the temperature of this region, from facts only half ascertained, the following official statement is of the greatest importance:

In general the climate is dry and subject to great extremes of temperature; there is an abundance of sunshine and for that reason, as well as on account of the dryness of the air, the extremes of temperature are not so noticeable as they otherwise would be. In the heart of the valley the temperatures sometimes go below freezing point in midsummer, but they do not remain below this mark, as a rule, long enough to injure hardy vegetation; however, when a temperature of 26 degrees is reached damage ensues, and the interval between the last temperature of 26 degrees in the Spring and the first in the Fall constitutes the growing season for the staple crops in the valley. This season usually begins the middle of May and lasts until the middle of September. The prevailing winds are southwesterly, with a tendency to veer to the west, or even northwest, at times during the summer months.

The mean temperature for the entire valley as obtained from all available records is 48 degrees; the warmest month is July with a mean temperature of 67 degrees, and the coldest is January with a mean of 31 degrees. The warmest part of the valley is near the mouth of the river, where the mean temperature is 52 degrees, from which point it decreases in going up stream to about 41 degrees near the mouth of the West Fork (Big River). In the summer months temperature of 90 degrees are not uncommon in all parts of the valley, except high up on the slopes of the mountains, where the thermometer seldom if ever registers 80 degrees. Sometimes the temperature rises above 100 degrees, but such great heat is rare and does not last long. There are usually short spells every winter with zero temperatures, and weather of this character may occur in December, January or February, but seldom is so low a mark reached in November or March, although in these months it has been that low on a few occasions.

A note under the table of frost data reads as follows:

In cases where the records do not show actual frost, temperatures of 26 or below have been used, as this temperature appears to be the critical one for the staple crops in the bottom lands, and hardy vegetation does not suffer greatly unless the temperature reaches 26 degrees or goes below that mark.
