

New Map Showing Bend's Advantageous Location.

Specially Prepared for Advertising Use on Back of Letterheads---A Brief Outline of Geographical Conditions in Reference to Country's Topography

BOTH to those familiar with the country and to strangers who have an indistinct idea of Central Oregon topography, the map herewith published for the first time will be not only of considerable interest but will have a unique value as being the only carefully prepared and accurate map picture ever made of this region. The work is the result of a careful compilation of the available data, in which all existing maps obtainable were employed and reference made to the railroad maps insofar as possible. The map was drawn for, and under the direction of, Frank Robertson, president of the Bend Townsite Company. While it of course is not free from many minor inaccuracies unavoidable in such a treatment of a vast territory upon a small scale, it can, on the whole, be trusted to furnish an accurate general idea of the Deschutes Valley and its relation to the rest of Oregon.

While the map will appear in several forms and sizes, the larger ones to be used for display purposes, the size here reproduced is especially intended for use on the back of letterheads. For this purpose The Bulletin will have possession of the plate. It will be printed on stationery at the rate of $2.50 a thousand sheets, The Bulletin being obliged to pay a portion of this amount in royalty for the use of the plate.

For the benefit of those unfamiliar with the territory a brief outline of its characteristics may be in order. West of Bend to the summit of the Cascade Mountains, about 30 miles distant, is a solid belt of yellow pine timber—credited with being the largest and most valuable stand of its kind left in the Northwest. At Bend this timber first comes in contact with the Deschutes River. Southward, in a strip averaging perhaps 50 miles wide easterly from the mountains, the timber belt extends practically to California—for at least 175 miles. A large body of pine extends a short distance south-easterly from Bend over the flanks of the Paulina Mountains. To the east of Bend is the 300,000 acre Carey Act irrigation segregation of the Deschutes Irrigation & Power Co., whose headquarters are in the town. South some 30 miles, about La Pine, is another irrigation enterprise, just getting into operation, of the Deschutes Land Co. Surrounding Laidlaw, west of the Deschutes and 7 miles distant from Bend, is a splendid irrigated country under the segregation of the Columbia Southern Co. East of Bend, in the vicinity of Powell Buttes (wrongly spelled "Pau Butte" on the map), is one of the very finest "dry farming" districts in the west. Surrounding Redmond, 20 miles north of Bend, is irrigated land. Prineville, 35 miles northeast, is the center of a big irrigated bottom-land and "dry" country, while the Agency Plains and Haystack territories around Madras, are noted for their dry farming products.

Practically speaking, everything north and east of Bend, when not irrigated, is "dry farming" country. To the southeast, in the triangle formed by the dotted railroad lines and beyond, is what well has been styled "the greatest free-land opening for the homeseeker left in the West." In that region are to be found several hundred thousand acres of rolling sagebrush and bunch-grass land, and broad valleys with rich, deep soil and water, which can be taken up under the 320-acre homestead act.

Just south of Bend the Deschutes has a number of great falls, offering unlimited water power possibilities. At, and near the town the river broadens out, affording many mill-pound sites. Practically from a few miles below Bend to the Columbia the Deschutes flows through a canyon, the lower 100 miles of which is a miniature Grand Canyon. Bend's altitude is 3600 feet. It is at mile 165 of the Oregon Trunk Railway—that distance from the Columbia, and practically midway between Celilo and Klamath Falls.

Locked In With a Maniac.
The writer was once closeted with a patient whom he had no suspicion of being mad until the latter got out of bed, turned the key of the door and preferred a mild request to the writer to have his throat cut, handing him at the same time an open pocketknife, which he produced from underneath his pillow. I objected to the knife as being too small for the purpose and begged to be allowed to go for my case of amputating knives, with which, I explained, the operation could be performed with greater neatness and dispatch. He unlocked the door at once, binding me over to secrecy and urging me to lose no time in returning. I drove home, reported the case to the authorities and came back with assistance. He was secured with great difficulty and sent to the asylum.—London TH-Bits.

The Woman in Russia.
"Love your wife like your soul and beat her like your carpet." This is a Russian proverb. Another of the same spirit, "Not long hurt the bumps from a loved one's thumps." Wives have undoubtedly been subjected to much ill treatment in Russia, where most husbands have always held to the opinion that "liberty spoils a good wife." Some Russian proverbs are cynical as to the delights of matrimony, and most married men know how to say, "Wed once, wail always."

His Chance.
Young Wife—Yes, dearest, I'm going to favor you at dinner tonight with a new cake that I invented all by myself. Young Husband (gloomily)—Say, I guess this will be a good night for me to bring Jim Taggart home to dinner. I don't like Jim.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Matter of Habit.
"But why do you put your friend's things in the dining room?"
"Oh, he is so used to restaurants that he won't enjoy his dinner unless he can watch his hat and coat."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Motor Anaesthesia.
Novice—It must be a dreadful sensation to run over a man! Chauffeur—Not nearly so dreadful as to run over a cow, and it doesn't injure the machine so much.—Judge.

Easy.
"Nellie" said the teacher, "you may tell me how to make a Maltese cross."
"Step on her tail," promptly answered Nellie.—Everybody's Magazine.

Saving His Mata.
On one occasion at a crowded performance at the Royal theater in Sydney, N. S. W., a number of years ago a couple of sailors who had been drinking were seated in the gallery. One lost his balance and fell into the stalls. The other immediately cried, "Man overboard!" and dived after his companion. With the proverbial luck of drunken sailors the first escaped with a broken leg and the second without a scratch.

The Complete Bookkeeper.
Mrs. Knicker—How do you make your books balance? Mrs. Booker—That's easy. I always spend the exact sum I receive right away.—New York Sun.

For Him to Say.
"Do you think I can stand an operation, doctor?"
"You know your financial condition better than I do."—Exchange.
