IMPERTINENT QUESTION NO. 9.

Are you going to take the train to Portland for the matinee on Saturday, November 4?

The Lakeview Herald expresses what appears to be a very general feeling of the south-central Oregon country when it speaks enthusiastically of Bend's efforts to get together with the communities of that rich territory and to establish and maintain with them cordial relations. Referring to Portland's apparent animosity regarding the trade possibilities of this section, the Lakeview paper remarks upon the "visible shortsightedness" of the Willamette metropolis. There is a Spokane in eastern Washington whose development in the last score of years has taken from the Puget Sound cities practically all of their east-of-the-mountains business. That there will be such a city in Central Oregon is beyond doubt. That Bend is establishing cordial relations with its natural territory, even at this comparatively early date, is a splendidly valuable step toward the development of such an inland distributing point.

The Bulletin has received intimations from the state game authorities that they are in sympathy with the scheme for the establishment here of a trout hatchery. Last year a generously signed petition, praying for the creation of such an institution on the Deschutes at Bend, was forwarded to Salem. And that was the end of it. If it is the intention of the powers that be to give such aid to Central Oregon, as The Bulletin believes it is, action should be taken immediately. Since the first promises were made a year has elapsed. The time is ripe for the work. Conditions are ideal for a hatchery here, the need of it is very real, and its benefits to all Central Oregon—for there are few people indeed in this entire territory who do not spend their holiday times on the Deschutes—would be most substantial.

The fate that overtook Lafferty is not surprising. Those who care to refer to the campaign advice given by The Bulletin may find it set down that "Lafferty is a whiffet. He belongs distinctly to the ranks of the undesirable." Nevertheless, the Lafferty episode, which at first was obnoxious, has become pitiable. For Lafferty keeps on making matters worse with his multitudinous statements; deeper and deeper he gets into the mire. If he would only keep his mouth shut matters would not be so bad. His constituents would welcome dignified silence far more than the endless letters telling of his virtues, loves, political victories and baseball leaderships, not to mention the foul mechanics of those who maliciously have "plotted to destroy him."

To those who had the good fortune to know her, it is hard to think of Myrtle Reed—for by her pen name is Mrs. McCullough best known—taking her own life because of unhappiness, as occurred last week. Through her many books, this kindly, clever and quaintly humorous author distributed rare pleasure to thousands. A gay writer, she always appeared bubbling with happiness when in contact with her hosts of friends. Those who have enjoyed "The Master's Violin," "Lavender and Old Lace," "Old Rose and Silver," and the other products of her talented pen, will mourn her sad death.

Bend is to be congratulated upon being able to have such an excellent exhibition as the beautiful flower show of Saturday, and even more so for the public spirited interest which made the affair possible. It is to be hoped that this pleasant event will become an annual custom.

Heard Here and There

According to the report of the United States Biological Survey, there are 2,000 deer in Oregon.

Governor West has retained State Senator C. C. McColloch of Baker to look after his interests in the $10,000 damage suit brought by J. E. Morsan of the Deschutes Land Co. of La Pine and Portland.

Trenton, N. J., has voted by a large majority for the commission form of government, including the initiative, referendum and recall. It is the first important Eastern city to adopt these progressive measures.

OREGON EATS NOW ARE DIRTY CHEAP

But the Bank of England Would Have Gone Broke if It Had Traveled in California in '49.

If any western traveler in these economical days gets an idea that things "come high" or that he is being "held up" when he tries to get a square meal in exchange for a lot of hard earned money, he'd better read the menu and prices below. Then he will cheer up. Also, he will be glad he's living in 1911, in Oregon, and not in 1849, in California, when and where this bill of fare was in actual use at a hotel in a town near the gold diggings.

WATER TEST CASE

I. J. Wilkinson Arrested for Breaking Headgate to C. O. I. Co. Ditch.

Whether or not it is a misdemeanor to break a headgate to a canal or ditch and take water therefrom for irrigation of land for which water right has been paid for will be tested in the Circuit Court by I. J. Wilkinson. On complaint of C. M. Redfield of the Central Oregon Irrigation Co., Mr. Wilkinson was arrested on a warrant sworn out Saturday.

In Justice Orcutt's court Mr. Wilkinson waived examination and will make a test case of the action. He has retained Vernon A. Forbes as his attorney.

NAMES DON'T MATCH

Centralo's Postoffice Reported as Having Deschutes for Title

According to reports from Laidlaw, W. G. Stiles has received the postmaster's appointment for the town that was to have been known as "Deschutes," for which he made application. However, there appears to be some possibility of confusion and amusing complications, inasmuch as since the application was made the name of the embryo city has been changed, thus presenting a chance for the unique situation of a town with one name having a postoffice with another.

As will be remembered, the first name chosen for the new town by Rosecoe Howard, who, apparently, is its sponsor, was "Wesley." Later this was shifted to "Deschutes." But when the time came to have the plat accepted the County Court held that still another title must be dug up, as "Deschutes" was already in use. Then "Centralo" was picked and officially adopted. Whether or not Centralo's postoffice is to be known as Deschutes remains to be seen.

NAPOLEON CARICATURES.

The First Was Drawn by a Fellow Student at Brienne.

Napoleon in caricature is one of the most prolific of subjects. Indeed, European political caricature from 1708 until 1815 may be said to have been Napoleon. Although in France this form of pictorial art was rigidly suppressed, Goussier and Rowlandson in England and a score of artists in Germany and Austria were depicting the great emperor as the most infamous of monsters.

The first known caricature of Bonaparte was drawn years before the first consulate, when the Bourbons still sat upon the throne of France. It is reproduced in Norwood Young's "The Growth of Napoleon." Young Bonaparte's years at the military academy at Brienne were not happy ones. He was a Corsican, and at that time Corsica was a recently conquered province.

The cartoon, which was drawn by a schoolmate, represents the future emperor standing, a severe and determined look upon his face, with both hands on the top of a musket, resting the butt on the ground. A smaller figure behind him, an old man whose nose nearly reaches his chin, is pulling him back by his wig.

Napoleon's feet face in two directions—one forward, the other backward. Underneath is written, "Bonaparte rushes to the aid of Paul to rescue him from the hand of his enemies." These words have been struck through with a pen, which has also been drawn across the face of Napoleon.

THE PERSIANS.

Not Ruled by Casts, but Are Great Sticklers For Etiquette.

The pleasures of the Persians are in the main refined. They have not many kinds of recreation. Conversation is one of their chief enjoyments. Although a large proportion of them can neither read nor write, I think we must call them an intellectual people. They are natural linguists, and since their country is inhabited by many different races they are obliged to speak several different languages. It is not uncommon to find a man who scarcely knows his right hand from his left who can speak two or three languages fluently. To this number a man of any education whatever would add two or three more.

There is no caste among any of the races found in Persia. A son of Nasir-i-Din Shah's butler became his prime minister; a peasant girl once became the first favorite of this same king's amir because she lifted her veil as the king was passing through her native village and her beauty appealed to the royal fancy.

But while there is no caste the Persians are in some ways great sticklers for etiquette. The Zli Sultan, the oldest and most capable son of Nasir-i-Din, could not succeed his father on the throne because his mother was not of royal birth. All social functions, moreover, are attended with the most rigid ceremonies, and woe to the person who attempts to overstep the bounds which custom has prescribed for his rank.—Mary A. Colquhoun in Los Angeles Times.

The Message in the Box.

On a table in the waiting room of a specialist is an inlaid box. When one opens it—and most visitors to the specialist do—a smaller box is found and one not so large inside that. This continues until finally the last is reached, a tiny thing with a slip of paper inside it. On the paper is a single word, "Curiosity."

"I keep it there to amuse waiting patients," explained the specialist. "If there was only one who went through the scale of boxes he might feel sorry about it, but he or she leaves the box closed for the next corner, and when there are quite a few in the waiting room it gets to be a pretty good joke, and I can hear laughter as the latest arrivals get stung. I picked the box up on a trip to India and happened to leave it in the waiting room one day. Now it stays there all the time."—New York Sun.

Peg Tankards.

The pegging or marking of drinking cups was introduced by St. Dunstan to check the intemperate habits of the times by preventing one man from taking a larger draft than his companions. But the device proved the means of increasing the evil it was intended to remedy, for, relying upon St. Dunstan's plan, the most abstemious were required to drink precisely to a peg or pin, whether they could liberally take such a quantity of liquor or not.

Different Positions.

"What does the man do over there at the desk who seems to be working so hard?"

"He checks the cash."

"And what does the man do who is leaning back in the easy chair smoking?"

"Oh, he cashes the checks."—Baltimore American.

An Exception.

"Happiness," devalued the philosopher, "is the pursuit of something, not the catching of it."

"Have you ever," interrupted the plain citizen, "based the last car on a rainy night?"—Toledo Blade.

Sensitiveness.

The smallest bird cannot light upon the greatest tree without sending a shock to its most distant fiber. Every mind is at least as sensitive to the most trifling words.—Lew Wallace in "Ben Hur."

New Gold Leaf Kills.
The Chinese consul at San Francisco discussed at a dinner his country's customs.
"There is one custom," said a young girl, "that I can't understand, and that is the Chinese custom of committing suicide by eating gold leaf. I can't understand how gold can kill."
"The partaker, no doubt," smiled the consul, "succumbs from a consciousness of inward guilt."—Los Angeles Times.

NOTICE FOR PUBLICATION

Department of The Interior, U. S. Land Office at The Dalles, Oregon.

July 19th, 1911.

Notice is hereby given that Theresa D. Innes, whose post-office address is Bend, Oregon, did, on the 21st day of January, 1911, file in this office seven state land claims, containing No. 10000, to purchase the 200, 200, 200, 200, 200, 200, and 200 acre timber tracts, under the provisions of the act of June 1, 1908, and 200, 200, 200, 200, 200, 200, and 200 acre timber tracts, known as the "Timber and Stone Lands," at such value as might be fixed by appraisement, and that, pursuant to such application, the land and timber tract have been appraised, at $40.00 the timber estimated 200,000 board feet at 20 cents per M, and the land $20.00; that said applicant will offer final proof in support of his application and sworn statement on the 30 day of September, 1911, before H. C. Ellis, U. S. Commissioner at his office, at Bend, Oregon.

Any person is at liberty to protest this purchase before entry, or institute a contest at any time before patent issues, by filing a corroborated affidavit in this office, alleging facts which would defeat the entry.

C. W. MOORE, Register. 24-29
