The Proof of the Pudding Is in the Eating
CLAIMS are easily made; but not always easily proven. We would not make the claims we do for the high quality of our stock if we were not convinced of their truth, and if we didn't have so many compliments from customers on the superiority of our trees, and the most excellent manner in which they were packed, enabling them to arrive at destination in prime condition. This last item, good packing, is easily overlooked by many, but is one of importance, and is one of the many instances where attention to detail keeps up the high standard of our trees.

FEAR AS A MALADY
Physicians Now Recognize Many and Strange Phobias.
PHASES OF MORBID FRIGHT.

Persons Otherwise Strong Mentally May Develop a Dread of Open or Closed Places, of Crowds, of Solitude and, in Fact, of Anything.
Fear as a disease had not received serious attention until recent years. Now it is recognized by the medical profession that there is a whole list of phobias, as they are called, which are quite distinct from a normal and legitimate condition of fear due to some natural cause.
Thus there is the fear of open or closed places, says the Medical Record, fear of high places, fear of men or women, fear of crowds and of solitudes, fear of animals, fear of insects, fear of darkness, fear of accidents, fear of fire, fear of travel and, in fact, fear of anything.
There is no end to the absurdity of acts which may be occasioned by these persistent ideas of fear. Those that possess the fear of riding on a train find no pleasure in traveling; those that have fear of closed places do not enjoy going to church and generally always sit near the door ready to fly at the first sign of danger.

Various fears may also develop in connection with the occupation of the patient—for instance, barbers sometimes suffer these attacks whenever they see a razor, or telegraphers when they catch sight of their instruments, which finally necessitates giving up the occupation.
Among women especially there occurs the fear of dirt, contagion or infection. The countless bacteria always present in the air are the chief source of annoyance. The patients are always complaining of bad air and are always throwing open the windows. Rooms are especially avoided as a possible source of contagion. In patients with fear of injury they will throw away all needles in the house or they will no more wash windows for fear that the glass might break and cut them.

The intellect in these cases is not only undisturbed, but may be unusually good. Patients exhibit throughout a pronounced feeling of mental illness and frequently a clear insight into the morbidity of the individual symptoms.
The more common of the various phobias as classified by Beard are as follows: Claustrophobia, fear of narrow or closed places; agoraphobia, fear of open places; astraphobia, fear of lightning; monophobia, fear of being alone; pathophobia, fear of disease; mysophobia, fear of contamination; siderodromophobia, fear of railroad travel; aerophobia, fear of being at a height or looking over precipices; thanatophobia, fear of death.
It is to be emphasized that the phobias in question are not normal fears, based on normal or natural fears, or on some reasonable justifying experience. A reasonable and justifiable normal fear of lightning might arise after the experience of having been at some time in a house struck by lightning.
Other fears, such as the fear of riding in a buggy after having been in a runaway or the fear of a voyage at sea or railway after a frightful shipwreck or railway accident, is a more or less natural or reasonable fear, as the fear of hoodlums and ghosts is among the superstitious or those accustomed to ghost stories and tradition of goblin visitation, etc.

These fears do not require a warped brain for their lodgment, though the weakened brain may be more vividly impressed by them. To be regarded as symptoms of disease these fears must be groundless so far as inducences external to the brain are concerned. They must proceed from a morbid state of the brain and not from properly existing external causes. They must be fears peculiar to the individual under peculiar circumstances of cerebral disturbance and not fear common to others and due to causes that naturally cause alarm and frighten.

Schoolroom Training.
Our schools are not training individuals. They treat the unfortunate pupils in the mass, as a dyer treats his amber by the vatful. Society needs the power of the child, and there are almost as many kinds of power as there are children. But these powers are latent and need to be aroused by the magic of personality. We now leave their discovery to haphazard after the child has left the general schoolroom. An earnest start has been made by sincere citizens to compel educators to use the great possibilities of the public schools for the training of useful individuals. A few vocational and special schools have been opened. Some of the states, a few of the cities, have studied the problem of individualized education. By and by the state will awaken to the possibilities of training its children into diversified and honorable usefulness. Then a perpetual supply of socialized useful individuals will be coming from the re-created public schools.—Samuel P. Orth in North American Review.

His Future.
Little Wimpleton had worked his courage up to boiling point. And he told the old, old story to the fair one of his heart. To his delight the maid reciprocated his affections. There was only one stumbling block, the girl's prin, proper and precise mamma, of whom little Wimpleton stood in great awe.

"I love you," said the maiden, "but you must ask mamma."
So little Wimpleton did.
"Ahem! Mrs. Duddles," he said, flushing like a beet, "I have come to inquire—I have come to ask—er—ahem!—er—what would you say to me as a non-in-law?"
"Why, Mr. Wimpleton," said the lady, "I really don't know. If you be having yourself as you ought to be probably shouldn't say anything at all, but if you didn't—well, my dear boy, you had better marry Jane and find out by experience."—New York Journal.

Nicksjack Cave.
Nicksjack was once the name of an important Cherokee town on the bank of the Tennessee river. The Cherokees, who had aided the British in the Revolutionary war and had been well paid for their assistance, clustered their wigwams at this point about 1780-82, and the village was known as one of the "Chickamauga towns." The meaning of the name is now lost, though it was probably of Cherokee origin, as it occurs in the annals of the tribe as a man's name. This name is also given to a creek and to a very remarkable cave, the latter being situated very near that point of the southern boundary of Tennessee where it is intersected by the line separating the states of Alabama and Georgia. Nicksjack cave, though but little known, is one of the wonderful caves of the world, being of even more imposing proportions than the Mammoth cave of Kentucky.—Argonaut.

Notifying the God.
One of the odd things the visitor to Burma will notice is the large number of bells about the pagodas. These bells are usually hung on sacred posts a few feet above the ground. They are sweet toned, as all Burmese bells are, but they are not furnished with tongues. The worshiper who comes to pray before the pagoda strikes one of these bells with a wooden mallet. This is to attract the attention of the god.
