

MOCK TRIAL FRIDAY NIGHT

STUDENTS ARE TO TAKE PART

High School Club Will Try a Member on Chicken Stealing Charge. Girl Will be Attorney for Defense—Other School News.

On a mock charge of visiting the chicken coop at the West home under cover of darkness and appropriating some of the fowls therefrom, Warren Wheelock, High School student, will be placed on trial Friday night. It will be just a mock trial, but the High School Club, under whose auspices the session of court will be conducted, expects to have lots of fun.

Principal Shouse will occupy the august place of judge; Margaret West will have the role of prosecuting witness; Ivan McGillivray will appear as prosecuting attorney and Emily Schreder will be on hand to see that the defendant is properly represented and receives justice at the hands of the court.

The boys of the physics class—Claude Vandeventer, Warren Wheelock, John Bates, Carl Hunter, Ray Deyarmond, Kenneth Minor, Ivan McGillivray and Fred Lucas—went through the Bend Water, Light & Power Co.'s power plant one day last week and were instructed regarding the generating of electric current, etc. This trip took the place of the day's laboratory work.

The interest of the boys and girls of the school has been enlisted by the local flower show promoters. Monday noon Mrs. F. F. Smith and Mrs. H. J. Overturn talked to the students, urging them to plant flowers and vegetables to be entered at the second annual show which will be held next summer. Prizes will be awarded to the boys and girls making the best exhibits.

Stanley Goodell entered Miss Holmes' room Monday.

BROWNING'S "SORDELLO."

Mystery of That "Colossal Dorellot on the Ocean of Poetry."
The impenetrable nature of Robert Browning's "Sordello," published in 1840, "a colossal dorellot on the ocean of poetry," as William Sharp terms it, has been the theme of many anecdotes. Tennyson declared, writes Lillian Whiting in "The Brownings—Their Life and Art," that there were only two lines in it—the opening and the closing ones—which he understood, and "they are 16th lies," he feelingly added.
Douglas Jerrold tackled it when he was just recovering from an illness and despairingly set down his inability to comprehend it to the probability that his mind was impaired by disease, and, thrusting the book into the hands of his wife, he entreated her to read it at once. He watched her breathlessly, and when she exclaimed, "I don't know what this means; it is gibberish," Jerrold exclaimed, "Thank God, I am not an idiot."
A French critic, Odysse Barot, quotes a passage where the poet says, "God gave man two faculties," and adds, "I wish while he was about it God had supplied another—namely, the power of understanding Mr. Browning." Mrs. Carlyle declared that she read "Sordello" attentively twice, but was unable to discover whether the title referred to "a man, a city or a tree."

SNAKES ARE USEFUL.

They Are a Check Upon the Lesser Reptiles of the Tropics.
What is the use of snakes? In their "going on their belly," the circumstance that so offended Heron, lies one of their greatest uses, because that, together with their internal formation and external covering, enables them to penetrate where no larger carnivorous animal could venture. Into dark and noxious morasses, bog jungles, swamps and the tangled vegetation of the tropics, where swarms of the lesser reptiles, on which so many of them feed, would otherwise outbalance the harmony of nature.
Wondrously and exquisitely constructed for their habitat, they are able to exist where the higher animals could not, and, while they help to clear those inaccessible places of the lesser vermin, they themselves supply food for a number of the smaller mammals, which, with many carnivorous birds, devour vast numbers of young snakes.
The hedgehog, weasel, Ichneumon, rat, peccary, badger, goat, hog and an immense number of birds keep snakes within due limits, while the latter perform their part among the grain devouring and herbivorous lesser creatures.—Harper's Weekly.

PAINTED OUT HIS HEAD.

Revenge of Carolus Duran on His Pupils, Sargent.
When John B. Sargent, the famous portrait painter, studied in the atelier of Carolus Duran in Paris his teacher showed his fondness for him by painting in his head in the great ceiling of the Luxembourg palace. Even after he branched out for himself his master often sent for him to come over to his studio and pose, his hands having especially won the admiration of Carolus Duran.
The time came, however, when Sargent could no longer answer the beck and call of his teacher, for he was getting work of his own to do, which would not allow him to leave his studio at a moment's notice. One day, it is related, Carolus Duran sent a hurry call for him, and when he received a note saying that Sargent was compelled to decline his request owing to pressing work he was furious.
A few days later a friend, to whom he had confided his anger at his recalcitrant pupil, asked him: "Well, how is it with Sargent? Have you made up? How is he?"
"Ah, no," said the painter, and he looked sad and his shoulders went up. "How is it with Sargent? 'Oest fin!' Another shrug. "'Oest fin!' It's all over! I have been to the Luxembourg. I went and got a ladder, and I painted out his head!"

A Notable Day's Work.

Robert Burns composed his masterpiece, "Tam o' Shanter," in one day in the open air. Burns went out of the house in the morning and, not returning, his wife joined him in the afternoon with her two children. Seeing that he was "roosting to himself," she forbore to interrupt him, but stayed in the fields at a distance, where she could see him. She observed him wildly gesticulating and at times fairly leaping with joy. She said to Allan Cunningham, the poet, after her husband's death, "I wish ye had seen him; he was in such ecstacy that the tears were happing down his cheeks." He committed the poem to writing by the riverside and went into the house and read it to his wife at the bedside with great triumph—one of the most notable day's work ever done in Scotland!
