IS IT AN OMEN?
Messengers From Heaven Gives Depot Platform a Jolt at Deschutes.
Sometime during the quiet hours of Sunday night, when no one was on hand to see it hurtle from the black heavens to earth, a meteorite fell at Deschutes, some eight miles north of Bend. The result was a broken plank or two, some charred woodwork and a collection of rock fragments, where the astral visitor scattered after being broken up by the contact with the railroad's heavy planking.
So reports J. T. Robinson, Jr., who describes the meteorite's material as being a sort of excessively hard and heavy rock, molten in appearance, and, to judge from its broken remains, about four inches in diameter.
