

GIRLS' PUT UP CLASSY GAME

LATEST IN FEMININE FASHIONS SEEN

After Near-girls Play Preliminary Game Real Girls' Teams Have Exciting Basket Ball Contest Friday, Blues Winning 26 to 24.

Even if anti-suffragettes say that women can't do men's work, it was shown Friday night that men—boys, at least—show up pretty well in girls' parts.

The "preliminary" to the White vs. Blue basketball contest in Linster's Hall was a maidenly affair perpetrated by ten youngsters arrayed in feminine glory like unto which even Solomon himself never had the nerve to sport. Also Jesse Hunter as referee, appeared becomingly clad in skirt, peek-a-boo and a witching Parisian millinery creation. Never a foul he called though; perhaps he feared a riot on the part of the "girls."

The Blue team comprised Arthur Vandevent, Max McGilvray, Wilhelm Smith, Howard Young and Clarence Bather. The Whites were Lloyd Kelley, Roy Fox, Earl McClure, John Steidl, Jr. and Hugh Thompson.

Real Girls Play Fast Ball. Then came the real girls, who gave a rattling good exhibition of basketball, the Blues winning over the Whites in the last two minutes of play by a 26 to 24 score.

Everyone played well and fast. There was fine throwing on both sides and the fastest kind of a brilliant windup, when the Blues picked up what looked like a sure defeat and romped in winners by one basket.

The lineup was as follows:
Blues—Louetta Wornstaff, Gertrude Markel, Ruth Caldwell, Arrie Black and Fay Deyarmond.
Whites—Anne Markel, Ethel Holmes, Reta Everson, Angie Young and Hazel Thorson.

During the games, and before, on Wall Street, the band played. The purpose of the entertainment was to raise funds to wipe out the High School athletic debt. The amount cleared was about $20.

BAY STATE HEARS CALL AND WILL VOTE FOR T. R.

Massachusetts Republicans, Noting Big Roosevelt Wins in West, Deride Standpat-ers Who Insist on Party Suicide.

COLONEL HAILED AS "INDUSTRIAL MOSES."

Lawrence Strike Makes Voters Think, Also Slur on Pennsylvania Victory—Rank and File in Victorious Line.

Boston.—Whatever the so called "Taft sentiment" might have been ten days ago, today it is all for Roosevelt. The conservatives in the Republican ranks—educators, lawyers, business men, farmers, operatives, the backbone of New England—were the first to hear the note sounded by Illinois and Pennsylvania, then taken up by Nebraska and Oregon, and today rock ribbed New England is in line for the one leader that can lead not alone the party, but all the people, to victory. The "third term" cry is today too weak to echo. It is lost in the same ridicule that meets Congressman Gardner's unconvincingly humorous demand that the colonel meet him in "joint debate." The colonel has shown so strongly as THE man, THE leader, that all classes of Republican voters, assured until now that Taft alone could win, turn toward the misinformers and smilingly utter Missouri's unwritten motto.

Of the incidental happenings that have kindled Roosevelt sentiment to enthusiasm none has been stronger than the sneering comment of a Boston newspaper that the Roosevelt victory in Pennsylvania was "a triumph for professional reformers and the coal miners." This awakened indignation among the workers, the rank and file of the party, who are always honest to detect the popular trend. The Pennsylvania workers knew what they wanted and voted accordingly. Those of Massachusetts will do likewise on Tuesday, April 30.

The Real Progressive.
In no state more than in Massachusetts have the silent voters had more striking cause for real deliberation on the presidential issue, and the lending element in this cause has been the spectacular Lawrence strike. What ever individual circumstances went to make up that calamity, the fact remains that the strike itself proved the existence of an industrial unrest that could mean only one thing—namely, that the people were dissatisfied and demanded and would bring about a change. Would they re-elect President Taft? How could they re-elect him when the demand for a change was so obvious? Would they elect a Democratic president? Perhaps since there must be a change. But when has the election of a Democratic president ever meant anything but industrial disaster? Who, then, was the real progressive, the man of vigor—an initiative and a referendum in himself—the man of deeds, to whom all the people could look for leadership out of an industrial wilderness?

The Workmen Answered.
The Massachusetts workmen asked this question. The candidacy of Theodore Roosevelt answered it immediately. But Massachusetts, one of the oldest of states and perhaps the most conservative, pauses to breathe before it begins to shout, and in the interim its own child, Maine, declared with emphasis for Roosevelt—Maine, in which the need of a strong, magnetic leader was not half so immediate as in Massachusetts. Nor was Massachusetts deaf to the shouts of Illinois and Pennsylvania. In its conservatism perhaps the Bay State was a little surprised at the magnitude of the Roosevelt victories in the west, but they were the spoken reflections of its own opinion rather than arguments for falling into a line of which Massachusetts was already a part.

All For Roosevelt.
The clamorers alone—the standpatting machine, backed by an almost unanimous party press—did the pre-ture shouting, invoked the dubsiously sacred name of "precedent" as argument in favor of party suicide. The silent voters were silent a while, waiting for the echo of their own thoughts. They heard it, not from one quarter, but from many, and perhaps no more impressively than from the Connecticut convention, in which the name of Taft was heard in silence, while that of Roosevelt called forth cheers that were more than significant.

New England is aroused and is all for Roosevelt. His candidacy stands for national expediency, surmounting any possible question of precedent. Massachusetts Republicans know it, and they will so vote.
