DENVER BUILDS ALL OF BRICK.

In a recent trip to Denver, Colo., Herman Suhrhenrich of Evansville, asked the driver of a Denver taxicab how many frame buildings there were in the city. The driver pointed out one or two. He answered, "I don't believe there are many more in the city."

"Denver is a city of brick," said the driver of the machine. "We don't experiment with wood here. We build homes of brick and they last. They're fireproof, too."

"The information brought back to Evansville by Mr. Suhrhenrich is just an example of what is being done the country over," declared John Andrus of the Standard Brick Co. "The big cities are through with wood. Brick costs only a little more in the first place and that small additional cost pays all kinds of dividends in better wear and safety from fire."

"Evansville is gradually learning this especially in the construction of larger buildings. Steel beams in buildings are often bent and twisted by the action of the fire. But brick is burned in the making and it cannot be burned again. Brick construction is the only safe method."

"The people of the country for years have thought of brick as an expensive building material. This week several people have inquired the cost of building a moderate sized structure, were surprised at the small additional cost of brick over frame construction. --Bend Brick & Lumber Co. --Advertisement.

Merry Xmas to Grandma

Dear Amy:--

John and I have already sent two easy chairs for Christmas to Grandma and Grandpa, and you ought to read the letter they wrote back. They said they knew their children were sensible as well as thoughtful, because they sent such sensible presents. They never got anything in their lives that pleased them so well.

As ever,
Lou.

P.S.--You and Bob, by all means, send easy chairs to your parents. Be sure to buy them from
