DEATH WARNINGS.

Soldiers Who Foresaw Their Fate on the Eve of Battle.

KNEW THEIR TIME HAD COME.

It Was Not Mere Fancy, but Grim Premonition, That Moved These Men to Read Their Own Death Warrants—A Case of Red Tape and a Bullet.

Premonitions get little attention, and those who have them little sympathy in these days. During the war, however, a premonition came to be looked upon as a most unwelcome guest. In the company I went out with there were two Garfield brothers. The younger, a quiet, modest fellow who spent his leisure time writing letters and reading, never joined in camp amusements, told a few of his more intimate friends while the regiment was in camp opposite Fredericksburg, Va. In 1862, that he would be wounded in the first battle he went into and die from the effects of it. The boys laughed at him and tried to cheer him up, but it was of no use, he never changed his mind. Aug. 28, 1862, was the first battle of the regiment. Young Garfield was as brave as the bravest at Gainesville.

"This is my first and last fight, boys, and I shall do my duty," is what he said when the regiment plunged into that battle, in which the Iron brigade of four regiments and two regiments of Doubleday's brigade, the Fifty-sixth Pennsylvania and the Seventy-sixth New York, met "Stonewall" Jackson's sixteen regiments and held them in check for four hours, our brigade alone losing 800 of its 2,500 men.

"I'm hit; goodbye, boys," said Garfield, as he fell out and went to the rear. "Yours is a flesh wound in the calf of the leg and in a few days will be all right," said the surgeon to Garfield. "Tell my parents I did not shirk my duty," pleaded the poor boy.

And he lay there without a word of complaint and died. Near him was "Kicker" Finch of the same company with a shattered knee, a much worse wound than Garfield's. Finch demanded attention. He forced the nurses to keep his wound bathed in cold water, and if they were at all neglectful he swore at them. Finch lived to kick about poor hardback and salt junk cut from dead horses, but Garfield is sleeping in the Bull Run cemetery.

Frank King was a rollicking young fellow in the same company, generous, brave and popular, a singer who always drew an audience. Like a hero he fought at Gainesville, Second Bull Run, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg and Fitzhugh Crossing.

"Line, this finishes my fighting," was what Frank King said to Lime White, a comrade, just as the Sixth Wisconsin swung into line for a charge the first day at Gettysburg.

"Killed in battle" is what the orderly entered after Frank's name that night. "Have all the fun with me you desire, gentlemen: It is your last chance," was what Major P. Blum of the Sixth Wisconsin said to a company of officers who were chaffing him about being so very sober the day before Grant moved into the Wilderness in 1864. Forty-eight hours later they rolled his blanket about him and buried him where he fell. Nothing could convince him that he would not be killed in that battle, though he had escaped in a dozen other great battles.

Captain Rollin P. Converse, who had won his way from the ranks and gone through a score of great battles, went into the first day's fight of the Wilderness, May 5, 1864, confident that he would do his last fighting that day. He never fought more bravely. They left him on the field with a thigh cruelly torn and death looking him squarely in the eye.

A Confederate surgeon told Converse that his leg would have to come off. "That would not save my life, so let it alone," was his quiet reply. But the surgeon began to arrange for an amputation.

"Let that leg alone," said Converse. The surgeon paid no attention to the wounded captain until Converse had taken out his revolver and pointed it at him. There was no amputation, and the next day they buried Converse with both legs.

Lieutenant John Timmons of Company C was entitled to muster out July 16, 1864, his three years having ended, but red tape intervened and delayed the order. Days and weeks passed without the word which would take him out of the service. On the night of Aug. 16, 1864, an order came for the regiment to march. A march then, in front of Petersburg, meant a battle.

"This is tough," said Timmons. "I ought to have been mustered out and gone home a month ago. In a day or two we shall have a fight, and I shall go to my long home—he killed." The first of the Weldon railroad battles, Aug. 18, John Timmons was killed—died of red tape and a bullet—Chicago Record-Herald.

Tokyo's Pool of Tears. One spot in Japan assumed by all is the "Pool of Tears," a little pond on the execution ground of an old prison at Tokyo. It never dries, and even the hottest weather seems to have little effect upon it. Since the removal of the prison so buildings have been erected on the site occupying the brow of a hill. By night it is supposed to be haunted by the ghosts of the many prison victims, and no person, it is related, is bold enough to venture that way after dark. In the daytime the hill is the resort of students who seek fresh air and exercise.—Argonaut.

"HIKING STENOGRAPHER" HITS TRAIL TOWARD BEND

Man Who is Plodding for Central Oregon all the Way From Texas Says Oregon is the Only Place.

H. G. Dunlop, the "hiking stenographer", is headed for Bend. Just now he is somewhere in Utah, hitting the pike across country for Central Oregon.

Dunlop is a legal and general stenographer, who intends to open an office here. He heard of Bend while he was in Texas, wrote for copies of The Bulletin and for literature, and after getting all the information he could, decided that Bend is the best town anywhere, and has started this way. His long walk commenced at Oklahoma City. Thence he went south to Fort Worth in Texas, and thence northwesterly through Colorado and Utah. The last part of the long route will take him via Pocatello, Poodleton and Baker City.

"I was in Oregon a year ago and wish I never left," he writes. "The Pacific Northwest beats anything else in the country. As I go along I am boasting for Oregon and Bend all the time. Already I know of one group of Oklahoma settlers who will go to Central Oregon."

It will Be Ready in a Minute

As a matter of fact this wonderful little disk stove is ready to cook in much less than one minute from the instant you turn the switch. And you can cook on it practically anything you wish.

It is, perhaps, the most convenient and useful of the great variety of electrical cooking devices now within the reach of all, not excepting those receiving the more modest incomes.

It represents the genius of the "Light House Keeping Age" now opening to us—banishing as with a fairy wand all the nuisances of smoke, soot, disagreeable odors, and tiresome delays.

You cannot fully appreciate its many virtues until you actually use it. Come in and cook on the fine little G-E stoves we carry in stock and learn a lesson in real convenience.

Or, better still, take one home to try.
