SLAVES OF THE DESERT.

A Lashing Taken With Gratitude by the Emir's Servants.

Abdel-Rahman wore a heavy scowf that bobbed it, for some one, and his fingers crossed his rawhide nooting as he watched the emir's being lashed. When all was ready to start he called out four names, and four dejected-looking Arabs answered shamefacedly to the summons.

The emir spoke to them dispassionately, as one might speak to one's dog, and then, tossing his nooting to the nearest of the four captives, he bade him sit on a dozen of the best, while he watched and criticized each stroke with grim earnestness.

It was not a pleasant sight to watch, and I thought it poorly to turn aside, but the rest of the caravan thoroughly enjoyed the exhibition and greeted each word and blow with approval.

When the punishment was completed each of the captives in turn came forward and kissed the emir's feet, thanking him for his mercy and calling Allah to witness that they were his dogs to do with as he wished.

From their subsequent conduct I have no reason to believe that they did not mean every word they said, though at the time I was skeptical. It is not every day that one sees such an object lesson in humility and feudal service. —Wide World Magazine.

INSPIRED AUTHORS.

Idea Came to Them, It Would Seem, in Parts of Themselves.

Bernard Shaw has stated more than once that he is "inspired." "I am pushed," he says, "by a natural need to set to work to write down conversations that come into my head unaccountably. At first I hardly know the speakers and cannot find names for them. Then they become more and more familiar, and I learn their names. Finally I come to know them very well and discover what it is they are driving at and why it is they have said and done the things I have been noted to set down."

Other writers and painters, too, have described their processes in a similar way. William Blake was positive and emphatic in describing himself as a mere amanuensis, writing down the words that were audibly spoken to him, and he painted in the same way from a model set before his eyes and visible to him alone. Rodin, the French sculptor, gave his assent to the same idea of models visible to the eye of the artist. Dickens said that his characters were actually visible and audible to him, and it will be remembered that "Kubla Khan" was dictated to Coleridge while he slept. —London Spectator.

The Curious Guanaco.

"Amara," guanaco whistled one, as they crowded low in the boat. "Kill" and he pointed to the rifle beside me in the stern sheets. The mud on brown of the white breasted, deer-like animal stood out, a little note of color, complementing strongly against the verdant green of the dark, wet forest side, but well out of range. I had seen the Indian guanaco skin capos (cloaks) sold by the fur dealers of Punta Arenas, but this was my first glimpse of the animal itself, many thousands of which I saw later during my expeditions through Tierra del Fuego and Patagonia. "You are a queer animal, indeed," apostrophized an Argentine lieutenant as he and Captain Musters once viewed a solitary guanaco. "You have the neck of a horse, the wool of a sheep, the back of a cat, the feet of a deer, and the swiftness of the devil." Yet without a graceful animal and at a distance not unlike red deer, though larger. —Quoting.

Jarred Her.

A Chilean woman was traveling in the orient. On a trip through a desert she was carried by four stalwart blacks in a chair suspended on poles. The natives started out with great cheer, but as the journey progressed and the sun beat down upon them they began to chant a prayer to Allah. It was melodious, though a bit mournful, its constant repetition was soothing, and the lady dozed. On awakening, the prayer, grown more mournful, almost despairing, was still being intoned.

Turning to her interpreter she asked the meaning of the mysterious words. The interpreter pretended not to hear, but being pressed for an answer finally bowed low and said:

"Madam, since you insist, they pray that the great Allah may make you less fat." —Chicago Tribune.

Sacrifice!

There was only one piece of pudding for dinner, and Mrs. Jones divided it between her children, Ned and Grace. Ned looked first at his piece and then at his mother's empty plate. "Mother," he said, "I don't think I can eat my pudding while you haven't any." "Why, Ned," said the mother, much pained, "how unselfish you are, dear; but, you see, my boy, there is no more pudding." "I know that, mother. You take Grace's!" —London Mail.

Reassuring Her.

"Do you really love me?" she wrote. "Referring to my last letter," he promptly replied, "you will find that I love you devotedly on page 1, madly on page 3 and passionately on pages 4 and 5." —Pittsburgh Post.

A creative economy is the fuel of magnificence. —Emerson.

SCHOOL MAKES GOOD SHOWING

19 mills (18 mills in 1911-12) and the year's receipts were $23,560.67, it is apparent that with the comfortable balance with which the year starts there is reason to believe that even with the expected increase in general expense an even greater balance may be expected next June, and in all probability a considerably lower levy.

This year, also, the district will be able to pay its bills in cash, thus saving the heavy expense under which it has been placed in the past through the discounting of warrants.

Small Bond Issue Favored.

Mr. Overturf called attention to the necessity of action in the matter of erecting a school house, again showing that the present structure is hopelessly overcrowded and is a disgrace from the standpoint of fire danger. The election for a $45,000 bond issue for the erection of a high school building and purchase of a site was snowed under in May, it will be remembered. J. P. Keves spoke warmly favoring a smaller bond issue, stating that the people in the election showed conclusively that they did not want such a large issue. He believes that a grade school and not a high school is needed, and said he has the assurance of competent architects that such a building of perhaps ten rooms can be erected of stone or brick for about $20,000. It is probable that the board will be petitioned to call an election for an issue of $20,000 or $25,000 for the erection of such a building.

Textbook Election Disputed.

After a brief discussion a vote was taken on free textbooks, and the meeting favored the purchase of the same. The cost will amount to about six-tenths of one mill tax, said J. B. Shouse, principal. Later, V. A. Forbes, attorney, stated that he had looked the matter up and was positive that the election, so far as it concerned the text book matter, was illegal and not binding, this because the notices posted of the meeting, in stating the purposes thereof, entirely omitted any mention of the textbook election.

the annual school election Monday, the Shepherd district elected N. P. Allen director for three years and Earl Saunders to fill the unexpired term of Charles Foster, deceased. J. E. New dining room furniture makes the dinner better.

Dear Amy:—

All doctors will tell you that food digests better when eaten in a cheerful dining room. I wouldn't have mine any other way. I went down town the other day and bought a complete new dining room set, and gave the old one to the cook, who got married. What a difference this new dining room set makes in our feelings when we sit down to dine. Now I'm proud of my dining room as I "serve" when we have a party. You and Bob must come to our party Friday night.

Lou.

P.S.—Of course, I bought our new dining room set where I buy all of my furniture—from
