FINDS MAN FROM HOME

Hugh O'Kane From Antrim and Alex. McKeown of Derry, Meet in Bend.
 Hugh O'Kane of the Hotel Bend for the past 10 days has been living over his youth in Antrim, in the Emerald Isle, meditating the formation of a local branch of the Clan na Gael, and planning an invasion of Ulster to quell the threatened outbreak of Sir Edward Carson against Home Rule. Early last week there came to town Mr. and Mrs. Alex. McKeown with their son. Although they registered from Seattle, something told Hugh that there was a past in which Seattle did not figure, and he inquired. Then it developed that his guests were from Derry in the beginning, and that Mr. McKeown had been born only seven miles from O'Kane's own first home. A slight difference of 32 years separated their departures from the "ould sod", Hugh having left home 49 years ago and the younger man only 17 years ago. But years are nothing when you meet a man from home, and so the two have spent all their spare time together talking over the land of Cuchulainn, and the joys of a "drop of Coleraine."
 Mr. McKeown has taken up a homestead in Millican valley and after spending the winter in town will go out to his claim in the spring.
