The Russian Frontier. One feature in which the Russian frontier differs from others is the complete ignorance of those living near the border of what lies beyond.

A correspondent of the Autocar says that he called at the Automobile club in Brevins, hoping to gain some information. The members received mequet kindly and did all they could to help, but explained that they never crossed the frontier and had no first hand knowledge. The German customs officer, living for ten years within yards of Russia, spoke no word of Russian, and the Russians beyond the chain spoke no German.

"There is a neutral strip some three or four yards wide between Russia and Germany, along which many Russian satellites are posted, and mounted Cosacks pass at short intervals, riding the boundary."—New York Sun.

The Word "Poultry." Poultry, according to the definition given in one standard encyclopedia, includes "the whole of the domesticated birds reclaimed by man for the sake of their flesh and their eggs." The word comes from the Latin "pullus," which could mean a young horse or donkey as well as a chick the English "foal" is akin to this, through the French "poulet," a fowl. But it is curious that "poultry" has no French version, the nearest equivalent being "volaille," or "oiseaux de basse cour," birds of the low land. German in its descriptive way knows poultry as "federvieh," feather-cattle.

A Vanished Shrine. "What of your trip abroad?" "My wife was deeply disappointed in one thing. She visited Shakespeare's home all right." "Well?" "But she also wanted to pay a visit to the tub of Diogenes."—Kansas City Journal.

Important. "Dobbeday seems to think himself a very important person." "Why, he can't even stand on a street corner and wait for a trolley car without putting on as many airs as if he were laying a cornerstone."—Birmingham Age-Herald
