

GUARANTEED FOR TWO YEARS

When you buy a hot water bottle—or any other rubber goods—ask for

“MAXIMUM”

Trade Mark

—the only kind ever sold that carries a TWO YEAR UNIVERSAL GUARANTEE.

Buy a Maximum at any Rexall Store here or abroad, and if it wears out within two years, you go back where you bought it—or to any other Rexall Store, anywhere—and get your money back.

Made from the best and purest rubber, extra strong, extra reinforced, with a perfection of finish that stamps every piece as a work of art.

Maximum, because of its great durability, saves you money and is a guarantee against danger of scalding and other inconveniences arising from the use of an inferior bottle, which often gives out just when most needed.

Each in box, with printed, two-year universal guarantee enclosed.

Maximum water bottles, ice caps, bath sprays, syringes, etc., are sold only at The Rexall Stores, of which there are more than 7,000 in the United States, Great Britain and Canada. They are the World's Greatest Drug Stores.

PLAY OF THE BLUEJAY.

It Likes to Tease Hawks and Owls by Imitating Their Calls.

The bluejay likes best to live in thick woods, but it often comes into open fields, orchards and near dwellings in search of food. When it discovers you it assumes a proud and angry air of conceit and defiance.

The bluejay's upper parts are purplish blue. The lower parts are purplish gray. The wings and tail are bright blue with black bars. The tail feathers are tipped with white. It has a crested head.

The bluejay builds its nest about twenty feet above ground. It is made of twigs and fine roots. From four to six eggs are laid. They are of a greenish drab color flecked with brown.

Doubtless the bluejay helped to name itself, as its common utterance is a long drawn "jay, jay, jay." This cry, with the bright blue colors, has given it its name.

While the jay sings no song it is able to imitate the calls of other birds, by which means it often attracts them to it like to tease and torment the owl and especially the little sparrow hawk.

This is done by imitating the cry of a wounded bird, which draws the hawk near. Then several jays will dart at the hawk, squealing and frolicking about in great glee. Sometimes the play ends in a tragedy, for the hawk pounces upon one of them to the dismay of the others. Jays may be caged and tamed like crows, and some writers say they can be taught to utter words.—From Bird Studies by Herman C. de Graat.

The Inartistic Frock Coat.

Let the Chinese wailow in all our virtues and in all our vices, but at least let them preserve Asia from our clothes. Can you imagine Confucius in a frock coat and a top hat? I regard the frock coat as the most horrible restraint ever worn by that absurd animal—man. When I pass a bronze statue of a British statesman buttoned up in a bronze or marble frock coat I cover my eyes and sink by in a paroxysm of horror. There is only one thing worse than a frock coat in bronze or marble and that is a pair of trousers in marble or bronze. I think our sculptors ought to strike against the bronze frock coat and the Getting Mixed in Art.

Occasionally Homer and the other reputable classics nod in the Boston environments.

A woman in Rhode Island wrote to the head of a Boston institution that advances art—all of them are supposed to—and asked when and where she could buy a Gilbert Stuart portrait—subject immaterial.

This recalls the Cleveland woman who said that a woman on Euclid avenue had a "full length Rembrandt" in her collection—but she had forgotten who the artist was.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Lucky Horseshoes.

She—Do you believe in horseshoes as an emblem of luck? He—Yes, if they are on the winning horse.—London Opinion.

Consider the Dew.

The question is often asked, Does the dew rise or fall? Dewfall is as admissible an expression as sunrise or sunset. In both cases the expression is at variance with scientific fact. Meteorologically, the formation of dew is not accompanied by motion in the vertical plane, hence there can be no question of rise or fall. Under certain conditions of wind, cloud and temperature variations dew is produced. Warm air charged with moisture comes in contact with a cooler surface. When in this contact the heat is subtracted from the air and the saturation point for that temperature is reached, the moisture, which in the air has existed as water vapor, is condensed upon the cooler surface at the point of contact. The dewdrop, also good English, although false physics, has no existence in the air, but comes into being upon the surface bedewed. It does not fall nor does it drop.—Harper's.
