The joke was on "Farmer" J. P. Doherty Sunday when he tramped from his place to the Willcoxon home and inquired if there would be any chance to catch a ride to town as he wished to do some Saturday's shopping. A Sunday dinner at a farm home where there are women cooks is a failing with J. P.; however, we do not approve of all this deception.

Mrs. Allen Willcoxon and sister, where Ina Hoe, were visitors at Prine-

Orders for onions have been com-ing to our people from all sides recently. The facts are the onlon acro-age was very light the past year owing to poor market and low prices received heretofore. Unless the grower can realize in the neighbor-Unless the grower can realize in the neighborhood of 3 cents per pound for onions the balance invariably appears on the wrong side of the ledger when the farmer figures up his labor, etc., in connection with growing and marketing this crop. When farming is done on a business scale, where the producers know within a cent what it costs them to produce certain kind costs them to produce certain kind of crops (figuring labor on a living basis); when the prices received for produce of all sorts is governed by the cost of production; when the net profits on each and every article of consumption is the same; when the farmer sells direct to consumer, with the possible exception of one middle-man if needs be; when that middleman's profit is regulated, then the matter of production will be largely a matter of location, rotation of crops building up of soils and preference of grower; then the farmer will have a chance for his life, or rather for the comforts of life and the consumer will have a like chance. Then the price of onlons will not be four cents on one year, with a chance of a raise. while the same crop sold for a cent and a half the prior year. Then the question will be largely one of supply and demand. Conundrum:—"Why should the farmer (as a business man) be compelled to reason like wise? Well, the price of spuds like wise? Well, the price of spuds was 'bum' last year, guess I'll plant several acres this year, price is sure to be better, or I'm going to plant a lot of so and so and take chances of getting good prices for it." These
