CRESCENT.

CRESCENT, Feb. 21.—A meeting was held Saturday evening by the people of Crescent at which resolutions were passed and forwarded to Congressman Sinnott, to have the land in the Paulina forest thrown open for homesteaders. The resolutions passed were made on the ground that many families were attracted last fall by the news that the land was recommended for elimination. It was then supposed that the formal land opening would occur in a few weeks, but it has been delayed and these families have incurred expenses of living during the winter. A committee of 12 also handed in a report, concerning the character and extent of the lands in the Paulina forest recommended for elimination. It was pointed out that the area in the upper Deschutes valley extends from the Crook county line, on the north to the Klamath Indian Reservation, a distance of 27 miles, and this area is 25 miles in width; that the three main forks of the Deschutes river have their head waters in this area. Further, there are several lakes, together with innumerable springs, and pure well water may be had in inexhaustible quantities. In three-fourths of the district by digging from 5 to 30 feet. What is not meadow and open lands is covered with a growth of lodge pole pine. The impracticability of throwing open the area under the enlarged homestead act was widely pointed out. In view of these resolutions, it is expected that the land will be announced open for entry by the first of May.

A skiing trip of interest was one made by Eddie Santry and Jimmy Morrison last Sunday morning, when they came in from the Santry ranch by moonlight, a distance of 17 miles, in a little over four hours, starting at 1 o'clock and getting into Crescent at 5:30.
