VENOMOUS LEECHES.

A Perilous Experience in the Swampy Jungles of Sumatra.

Dr. Andries Verhagen of Batavia, Java, was directed by the government of the Netherlands to go to the eastern end of Sumatra to study a terrible epidemic of beriberi which had broken out there. The ship in which he sailed was wrecked, and he and a young assistant offered to go into the interior to seek assistance.

For about ten minutes they struggled through a dense and swampy jungle. Suddenly the younger man cried out with pain. Going to his aid, Dr. Verhagen noticed three leeches attached to his arm. They were of a venomous variety that cling to the lower branches of the bushes awaiting their prey and, not content with gorging themselves on blood, inject into the wound a poison that causes acute pain.

While Dr. Verhagen was helping his assistant innumerable leeches attached themselves to his face and neck. To free him from them the young man had to scrape his skin with a sharp stone. Exhausted by loss of blood, the doctor managed to crawl back to the wreck of the ship, where he fainted. He was taken to a hospital the following day, and it was several weeks before he recovered. One of his eyeballs was totally destroyed by the terrible leeches, its socket being left empty.—New York World.

EASILY SATISFIED.

She Didn't Go Visiting Just For What She Got to Eat.

"Now, don't put yourself out on my account," said Aunt Nereida, Benn, as she untied her bonnet strings after arriving without previous warning at the home of Aunt Jane Joy.

"You know me well enough, Jane, to know that when I go a-visiting it ain't for what I get to eat. If you just stir up one o' your 'lection cakes, an' make one o' your raisin pies an' a pan o' your cream tartar biscuits, an' fry a chicken, an' have a little cranberry sauce with it, an' mebbe a glass o' your grape or currant jelly an' a little o' your watermelon preserve, an' 'ben make a pot o' coffee an' put on a few doughnuts, I'll git along all right without another thing, unless you'd like to bake some of your Greening apples. They go rather good with roast chicken.

"I'm thankful I ain't one o' the kind that visits only for what they git to eat. Older I grow, the less I care for what's set before me when I go visitin'. How did your pickall come out you told me you was goin' to make? I deno but I'd like a little mite at dinner to see if the reset worked as well with you as it did with me."—Judge.

A Scorpion.

"I took my first typescript—get that?—typescript to a manager who happens to be a friend of mine," said an aspiring dramatist. "I discovered that managers have an irreverent incredulity combined with a scorpion's sarcasm.

"You wrote a play?" he marvelled. "Who told you to?" "I wrote it on my own initiative; I answered stiffly. 'Nobody would ever write a play if people waited to be told.'

"I would not do anything so difficult as write a play unless I was forced," declared the manager. "It is easy, not difficult, to write a play," I argued. "It is as easy as falling off a log."

"He read the play and sent it back with a scrawl on the title page as follows: "Compared with writing such a play as this it would be totally impossible to fall off a log."—New York Times.

Diagnosis by Electricity.

For the benefit of the nervous cases that come to the doctor it has been asserted that it is just as necessary to know how emotional they are as it is to know how high the temperature is in a case of fever. Moreover, in many cases, it is necessary to find out what experiences in the past or present life of the patient produce emotions. For this purpose the patient sits at ease with hands on the electrodes, which may be so concealed in the arms of his chair that he is unaware that the most intimate processes of his soul are being registered as various words are spoken or various topics of conversation are discussed, the galvanometer showing when a sensitive subject has been touched.—Harper's Magazine.

Fame of Tenedos.

Tenedos, which certain powers have taken away from Greece, has become well known by name from having the good luck to get mentioned in the first book of Homer's "Iliad" instead of the last, as well as in the beginning of Vergil's "Aeneid." Ever since Homer's day this fertile islet, lying at the entrance to the Dardanelles, has been considered of great strategic importance. During classical times the laws and civil institutions of Tenedos were celebrated for their wisdom and were discussed with approval in a lost treatise of Aristotle.

It Didn't Bite.

"Is this picture show one that it will be all right for my daughter to see?" asked the man who was next at the ticket window. "Sure," replied the girl in the booth. "I've saw it, and it ain't hurt me."—Chicago Record-Herald.

A Change

The story of every child is a story of growth and change—

A change too gradual and subtle for even the watchful eye of a mother to detect, or for memory to recall.

Only in pictures can the story be told, and a record of the childish features and expressions kept for all time.

A good photograph now and then, will mean everything to you—and to them in after years.
