THE WAR.

Almost overnight the war clouds, long gathering on the political horizon of Europe, broke into furious storm. The great nations of the Old World are at each other's throats. What promises to be the greatest struggle of all time is gaining bloody headway.

The causes of the conflict are tangled and obscure; the truth of all of them never will be unraveled—perhaps long-nourished hatred, vanity and greed are the culprits rightfully chargeable with the wholesale bloodshed.

The outcome is beyond human power to determine; Europe's map will be revised mightily, crowns will crumble, inconceivable economic loss will result and ultimately the poor of all the world, and especially of the stricken battle zones, will suffer horribly.

Rightfully or wrongfully—and it would seem justly—the sympathies of the United States are almost solidly for the anti-German allies. We find ourselves welcoming news of British, French, Belgian and Russian victory, and lamenting German-Austrian success. We appear strangely gratified with the apparent prospect of France recovering the provinces lost to Germany in 1870, almost personally proud of the heroic deeds of the Belgians in their struggle for their homeland, and secretly hopeful that the brazen War Lord's dreams of conquest may crumble in defeat.

The mad folly of the war is unbelievable. Sixty days prior to the declaration of hostilities, none would have believed a prediction of its speedy coming. The world is too civilized, we would have said; war on such a scale—slaughter, property loss, suffering, de-civilization—is impossible today; such war is for barbarians. But then came the sudden roar of cannon; treaties, bond of blood, peace tribunals and all the rest of the international co-operative fabric vanished, and the primitive fighting spirit replaced it.

Our isolated position and freedom from entangling alliances inspire us with the cheering assurance that we are in no danger of being drawn into the quarrel. Can we but contrive to stay out, there is good reason to believe that we shall benefit by the loss of others—benefit at least, so far as that is possible where vast total losses are certain and the business framework of the whole world is warped. Certain it is, however, that whatever harm we ultimately may sustain will be as nothing compared with the economic downfall of Europe; comparatively, our position will be so prosperous as to be a boon.

Pieces of our food stuffs—for we must feed the warring world—will advance, and the growers will benefit. The markets for our manufactured products will widen wonderfully, for crippled Germany, and her war-ridden neighbor countries must perform abandon their commercial hold upon the markets of South America and all the Far East. The opportunity of all time awaits our shipping; with the seas swept clean of competitive vessels, with our productive resources unimpeded and the markets of the world clamoring for our products, it requires only a modicum of initiative to build up a respectable merchant marine and again place our flag upon the high seas.

A survey of eastern press comments upon the unfolding situation is instructive and reassuring, so far as our selfish interests are concerned.

Two extracts are typical of the optimistic viewpoint. Says the New York "Evening Mail":

"America would send grain and all other food stuffs, horses for cavalry mounts, petroleum for the great number of motor vehicles now employed in war, gunpowder and other munitions; while the necessity of reconstructing railways and bridges would cause a great demand for our iron, steel and lumber.

"Everything is used up in war—vehicles, animals, chemicals, coal, lumber, cotton cloths, leather, and many other articles which we export to Europe. At the same time, the paralysis of the productive industries of several great European countries would make us the leading source of supply for Asiatic, African, and South American countries, with which we now have comparatively little trade. Our commerce would doubtless be permanently stimulated with many of these countries through the opportunity with a great European war would afford.

"Such a war could hardly be otherwise than materially profitable."

The New York "World" remarks: "America would suffer least of all. If Europe insists on committing suicide, Europe must furnish the corpse for the funeral." And the point that the New York "Sun" makes is that this country may share in the world's loss, and it may gain at the expense of some competitors, but it will certainly find itself in a better relative position in the future.

"In its ultimate relations, anything resembling a general European war would seem likely to guarantee that the economic future will belong to the American continents, especially to North America. The paralysis of European finance and commerce during any such upheaval and their subsequent prostration will leave the way clear for all nations whose energies have not been debilitated and whose resources have not been exhausted by the waste of war. It was in the Civil War that American shipping supremacy was lost. As a result of a European war it may be regained with contributing influences to its recovery provided by the facilities for commercial expansion which the Panama Canal and the approaching modernization of the American banking system will supply.

"In more ways than one the folly of warfare which Europe has long been threatening to commit and at last seems determined to perpetrate must spell opportunity for the United States."

A FAR ECHO.

How quickly and how far fame spreads and tales go is indicated by the following editorial taken from the "New York Press" of July 20: "PERILS OF MAYORING."

H. A. Miller, Mayor of Bend, Oregon, will write an autobiography on the perils of Mayoring—when he catches his breath. Something the Mayor did caused the citizens of Bend to go on a bend, and their Mayor almost got badly bent.

"What did His Honor do thus to arouse his constituents to wildness? Did he license four saloons on all sides of the most popular church in town? Did he turn the ball park into a croquet course? Did he loot the town sack of the last red cent? Did he get all the citizens in one building and try to blow it up with dynamite?"

"No, none of those wild things. He merely mustered up courage a few days ago to announce his engagement to a charming young lady—a niece of the late Senator Heyburn of Idaho."

"Whereupon the jovial benders of Bend seized Mayor Miller, manacled and chained him, and thrust him into a cage. Like a captive of ancient Rome he was pulled through the streets, his progress marked by the blowing of tin bazoons. His captors took him to the town theatre, where he was exhibited on the stage and broke up the monthly show."

Still it seems that the people of Bend, Oregon, have no especial aversion to Mayors. Rather, it is the time-honored institution of matrimony which excites them. Only a short time ago they put their city attorney in jail when he returned with his bride from a short honeymoon.

Out in Oregon the people can recall pretty much anybody or anything in public life or public business. The blessed state of matrimony in Bend faces a harder lot than the recall."

With the mad folly of the European nations before us, how sane and wise seems the course of our Administration in avoiding hostilities with Mexico.

STATE INSPECTORS HERE

J. D. Mickel and L. B. Ziemer Go Over Stores and Restaurants

J. D. Mickel, state dairy and food inspector and L. B. Ziemer, an inspector of his office, were in town last week making an informal examination of local groceries, restaurants and markets.

According to Mr. Mickel Bend has on the whole a very satisfactory condition in the various places where food is sold and prepared. One meat market, he said, is the equal in fixtures and appointments of any he has ever seen. Local grocery stores also, he said, were on the whole clean and well kept, although in one or two instances slight betterments might be made.

Mr. Ziemer went over the new creamery and pronounced it in fine shape both as to machinery and quarters. He will come down again soon to inspect all the dairies in the neighborhood.
