THE PORTLAND EXCURSION.

An extremely pretty girl on an observation car stood where she blocked the outlook of those behind her. Suddenly becoming aware of this fact, she turned to a young man whose view she shut off and said, "Oh, I'm so sorry! Do I obstruct your view?" "Yes," said he frankly, "But stay where you are; I prefer the obstruction to the view."

The Ad Club excursionists have come and gone. Again we are free to look out upon our customary view undisturbed, resuming our everyday tasks. And, frankly, we too prefer the obstruction to the view! Not that we aren't enthusiastic about our view, but we like the Portland crowd, and if they had half as much fun being entertained as we did entertaining them all concerned had a royal holiday.

From our standpoint the trip was a colossal compliment. At any time for any excursion to journey from a town the size of Portland to a town the size of Bend is flattering. But when that excursion comes at a time of business depression, with its maximum number—indeed, applicants for places on the train were turned away—Bend rightfully can consider it a notable tribute.

We sincerely hope, and we believe, that the visitors saw things worth while from a commercial standpoint, as well as enjoying two days of recreation. And we are positive that never before has a community such as Bend secured more valuable advertising than will result, and already has resulted, from the excursion. Today Portland is full of Bend's sincere friends, and assuredly our friendship for Portland burns brighter than ever in the past.

On behalf of Bend it is especially satisfying to record the appreciation of all those who had most to do with handling the affair for the splendid co-operation of our friends to the west. Sisters did herself proud, and won the hearts of the Portlanders as well as our own sincere gratitude.

The Bulletin is duly grateful to the Evening Telegram of Portland and its chief, John F. Carroll, for its editorial expressions regarding this paper, and, especially concerning Bend as a whole. Nor is the gratitude of Bend restricted to any single Portland paper; all three of them have treated us with marked generosity and accorded the Ad Club excursion a remarkably fine and valuable lot of publicity.

Bend appreciates the capabilities of its three newspaper guests of last week, W. P. Strandborg, Rex Lampman and Marshall N. Dana.

School Superintendent Myers in a week has traveled 1000 miles in Crook county on school business. He has been visiting as many as possible of the 90 or more school districts in the county at the beginning of the school year. It is desirable for the school superintendent to visit the different districts often but in a county of the size of Crook that is not possible. Here is an instance where efficiency, cost and convenience will be served by the creation of new counties. Vote, For New County, (Deschutes), Yes. For New County, (Jefferson), Yes.

MANY MUTS FOUND HERE

Initiation of Local Men by Portlanders Full of Fun.

W. P. Strandborg, better known as "Bill", the originator of the Muts and the Big Chief Mut, with Ed Werlein and C. F. Berg, installed a Mutch Dynasty here. The ceremony occurred on the Emblem Club lawn, and was preceded by the conferring of the "Degree of Equality" by Judge Colvig. The whole thing was glorious josh, with just enough of a serious nature to make it well balanced.

All of the local men present were made Muts, after the following had undergone a grilling cross examination which laid bare their secret history and kept the audience in a roar of laughter: J. P. Keyes, C. S. Hudson, John Steidl, G. P. Putnam, H. A. Miller, R. M. Smith, D. M. Davis, U. C. Coe, E. M. Lara, W. D. Cheney and O. Laurgaard.

THE TELEGRAM HONORS BEND

GIVES LEADING SPACE IN EDITORIALS

Portland Paper Has Kind Things to Say of People, Town and Country—Says Climate Here is Ideal Change for Portland People.

The following was the lead editorial in Tuesday's edition of the Evening Telegram, of Portland:

"A FEW WORDS ABOUT BEND." "A community is what its people are and stand for. There are other places of 2500 inhabitants which are simply villages, whilst Bend has an individuality which sets it conspicuously forth in the whole state. It is not because it's Bend or because of its location, or if these enter into it they are simply incidental factors, but it is chiefly because of the people. They play together and they work together. They are for Bend always. They talk about it, they preach it, they dream it. They are proud of it, they are confident of the future and they show it in their works. Now the general aspect of Bend's surroundings, to be honest, do not conspicuously appeal to residents of the green and beautiful Willamette valley. It is a section that needs water to make it beautiful and prolific. The roads are bad at this season, being unlike other places, best in Winter when the rain packs down the surface and makes them delightful to ride over.

"But Bend is surrounded by big bodies of timber that will be a source of much wealth to it for years to come. It has a water supply that is unequaled for water power purposes, that is so abundant in streams like the Deschutes and its tributaries, that it can supply, notwithstanding the liberal way it has already been drawn upon, thousands of acres of land and bring them to a condition of commercial reclamation. That section, with an altitude of 3600 to 4000 feet, is best adapted to raising forage crops, which means that the output under the best conditions will largely be cattle and hogs.

"Bend has a considerable scope of country which it can reach in a commercial way. In some directions it reaches a hundred miles. The people thereabouts are now engaged in trying to get a separation from Crook county so as to form Deschutes county. Distances in that region are great and the tendency seems to be toward segregation. A claim which Bend has to fame and which is not generally known is its advantage from a standpoint of health. As a change climate from Portland it would be hard to beat it. Its altitude of 3600 feet gives an electric element to its air that is wonderfully stimulating to the lungs and increases the red corpuscles in the blood to such a degree that even Dr. Pierce is not tired trying to compute them. It is a fine country for those threatened with consumption, but it is equally fine throughout that whole region for the Western Oregon people to go to get that complete change of climate which is so essential to their perfect wellbeing.

"There is one feature of a community which usually gets scant public recognition in comparison to its importance in the upbuilding of a community and that is the newspaper. Bend, in The Bulletin, has an unusually strong and virile newspaper and in Mr. Putnam, its owner, a man of a stamp seldom found in a small Western community. The man and the paper have been very important elements in the building up of Bend. To those outside of Bend the town is largely judged by its newspaper, and in this respect Bend has good reason to be grateful for The Bulletin."

WEIDER LONES HOME. The home of N. P. Weider in Lytle was destroyed by fire at midnight on Friday. Mr. Weider was absent at the time in attendance on the Odd Fellows reception to Grand Master Galloway. In the absence of a water hydrant in the neighborhood efforts at saving the house were useless. It was insured for about a third of its value. The cause of the fire is not known.

NEW RAILROADS SAYS McMURRAY

THE LAND OF TABOO. In this last, great West, of all lands the best, Man's courage revives and his hopes renew. Opportunity waits, every prospect elates In the vales of the Land of Taboo.

You have big men here, to aid and to cheer, They are making the world anew. Your blossoming plains and your golden grains Welcome all to the Land of Taboo.

It is fruitful and fair; it has life-giving air. It has mountains majestic and skies ever blue, No one need roam—here is home, sweet home, In the sun-kissed Land of Taboo.

Kindly greeting awaits at an empire's gates, In this land where dreams come true! There's enough and to spare—there is surcease from care, In this bountiful Land of Taboo.

In venturing to designate this section by a new name, I am prompted by desire to pay tribute to one of the empire builders of the Pacific Northwest—one who has evidenced his faith in your ultimate and abiding prosperity in a most substantial manner. To designate the man and the land of his choice by an appellation other than that chosen would detract from his splendid achievements. His mission is that of a builder. He has set himself a task and he is destined to secure results even greater than anticipated.

Bend is the natural gateway to the rich valleys and the uplands of Central Oregon. Tributary to it are vast areas of agricultural lands, practically inexhaustible forests, mines and quarries. Coursing through its corporate limits is a stream which will furnish unlimited power. This great river, with its confluences and the other streams which have their source in the mountain ranges of Central Oregon, will not only supply needed power, but diversion of their waters will render more productive your already fertile lands.

"But little time has passed since the railroads were built into the valley of the Deschutes and to the city of Bend. To construct these lines to this point cost nearly $25,000,000. When it was announced recently that to build a railroad in Alaska the sum of $35,000,000 was to be expended, the press of the country emblazoned the fact in glaring headlines, ratification meetings were held and general rejoicing resulted.

Gentlemen, it will cost many additional millions to build the railroads Central Oregon needs and must have. These roads will be built without flourish of trumpets or government aid. While the date of construction is not yet announced, their building and operating is a certainty. They will penetrate a country richer than Alaska. They will be operated where agriculture reigns supreme, and upon agriculture the prosperity of this nation depends.

I have little patience with those who decry our agricultural possibilities. This section of the United States can sustain millions. There are lands subject to homestead entry in Central Oregon which are worth more by far than all the gold of Alaska. To the man who says transportation is lacking, my response is that transportation WILL come, and that in the meantime a home may be founded. There is always a living on the farm. Railroads do not cultivate land, herd flocks or supply household necessities. Men and women must do these things. Stock may be driven to market and there are many farm commodities which will pay for transportation to the railroad.

What Central Oregon possesses in the way of land suitable for farming and stock growing, and its other resources is gradually becoming better known. In the establishment of a city like Bend, with its varied industries, you are laying the foundation of a great city. On all sides you

WAR NEWS THE PAST WEEK

Latest reports from the European war are to the effect that the greatest battle yet known is being fought this week in France. The German advance on Paris up to a few days ago had been so rapid that the investment of the city was feared, causing the French government to remove to Bordeaux, but the invaders were outwitted in a turning movement of the allies' right flank and lines were drawn for the battle now raging. The English general, French reported yesterday that the Germans were in retreat to the North.

On Germany's eastern frontier the Russian advance has been slow. Reports indicate that the Austrians have been successfully cleared out of the road and war experts figure that Germany will soon have to withdraw troops from France to meet the Russian invasion.

England's control of the North Sea has not been as secure as was thought, a number of English trawlers having been sunk in a raid by German cruisers. As a result it is expected that the English will soon take some decisive action against the German fleet. Mines laid by the Germans in the North Sea have been responsible for the loss of a British cruiser and a number of passenger steamers belonging to neutral powers.

Turkey has as yet taken no decisive action on behalf of Germany and Austria but it is believed that she may join them at any time. Japan has completely invested Kiao-Chau and plans, according to reports, to starve the garrison of the town out rather than to sacrifice troops in taking it by assault. Italy remains neutral.

are surrounded with wealth of soil and forest and riches of scenery. With the building of ocean to ocean highways, this section must be traversed if the scenery worth while is an attraction. Your mountains and rivers are as alluring as any on the continent. Your wild game in the higher reaches and the fishing streams will draw multitudes.

Someone has said that "weather is what happens; climate is what we have all the time." Bend with its altitude of 3500 feet is a happy medium between sea level and elevations where the air is light. The life-giving atmosphere, the pure mountain water, the breeze redolent with the balsam of the fir and pine, the warm winds born in from the Pacific during the winter months, the cooling zephyrs from snow-capped mountains in the summer, the light snow fall and the equable temperature have made this a nature sanatorium. Nature's efforts are to be augmented by man and when your great institution is in operation the boon of your climate will prove a blessing to thousands.

I know that the gentlemen of Portland who are here are glad that they came. Our visits should be more frequent. Portland, the metropolis of the western part of Oregon, must needs keep in close touch with the coming metropolis of Central Oregon. Bend has a citizenship of which it may well be proud. Its Emblem Club is an organization of men who are doing things for their home town and for Oregon. I stand abashed at the thought of courtesies of which I have been the recipient at the hands of this organization and my inability to reciprocate in kind.

Under such leadership as yours, Bend and Central Oregon must become generally known. You are putting forth no claim to anything wherein you cannot deliver the goods. This is the secret of success in all human undertakings. It is a pleasure to witness your growth, to learn of your prosperity and to again be the recipient of your hospitality. May good things continue to come to you who dwell in this inviting Land of the Taboo.
