

ALL READ THE BULLETIN.

Four generations of the same family renewed their subscriptions to The Bulletin Monday "because they couldn't get along without the paper." That's what they said, anyway. When the great-grandmother, her daughter, her granddaughter and the granddaughter's daughter paid their money and got their receipts. The four are Mrs. M. Orowler of Portland, and Bend, Mrs. Charles Orowler of Bend, Mrs. Ruth Shearer of Powell Butte and Ruth Shearer, her little girl.

FAREWELL SURPRISE PARTY.

Last Wednesday afternoon 25 ladies of the Presbyterian church gave a farewell surprise party to Mrs. J. H. Gerbing, who left Saturday for Lamont, whence she and her husband proceeded to Rockyford, Colorado. Refreshments were served and Mrs. Gerbing was presented with a handsome camcote by her many friends, as a token of their regret at her departure.

committee from here went to the county seat to arrange such lines. Mr. King saw the boundaries agreed upon and expressed himself as entirely satisfied, so far as they were concerned. When asked what stand he would take he said: "I don't know yet. For the present I shall take no active part on either side."

The double crossing indulged in by Mr. King and his associates is further evidenced by the following extract, written by Howard Turner in the Madras Pioneer:

"Their (the anti-divisionists) principal line of argument being that this was not the opportune time for division, from the fact that monetary conditions were not stable enough to justify it. Four years ago the writer was one of a party who met with the Prineville Commercial Club at which time Redmond had proposed to divide Crook county, drawing their lines closer to Prineville than the present line, and at this meeting many speakers remarked that if we would support the movement against it at that time that at a future date they would support us in cutting loose. Some of those same parties have been out in this section this week fighting the Jefferson county movement again."

H. A. Bowman and J. B. Bell, as mentioned before in this paper, are abstractors. They live entirely from county seat business. They are strong talkers about higher taxes. Last year these gentlemen paid in taxes, one $20.67, the other $22.36.

The personnel of the other chief fighters is made clear in the articles quoted above; enough to show that the whole anti-division fight, so far as the old county residents is concerned, is backed by a political ring, which fears trouble for its office holders if division is carried, and businessmen whose profitable trade, dependent upon the county might be injured.

REDMOND SHOW IS SUCCESSFUL

cess, taking every first for potatoes. In his display, according to those who have followed the potato show from the beginning, was to be seen the influence that the show has had on the potato growers of this section. Mr. Mustard has been a close student of the potato, he has been careful in the selection of his seed and he has learned all he could from experience. As a result he takes prizes with his "spuds."

Another portion of the display in the hall that gave encouragement to those who are trying to build up the country was corn. This was not as much in evidence as the other vegetables but that it was in evidence at all was a hopeful sign, as it was to see 35 pound watermelons as shown by "Joe" Howard, and tomatoes and cucumbers and squash and pumpkins from several points.

Community Exhibits.

Among the community exhibits, that from Terrebonne occupied the place of honor near the door while Sisters was next with the cream of her fair of two weeks ago. These were general collections and showed the success that is attending the farmers of these communities.

Another general collection showed individual success of a most unusual sort, but more than the sign over the table was needed to tell the whole story. That gave merely a ranch name and the observer looked at and then at the 40 or more items in the exhibit and thought that it must be a busy ranch. When he was told, however, that the ranch was run by two bachelors, the Heimboltz brothers, and that they had done every bit of the work represented in the display he looked again. Then when he saw all the grasses raised in this country, 20 or 25 kinds and varieties of grains, miniature tales of hay and alfalfa, all the vegetables, grass and clover seed, eggs, cream, butter and a dozen jars of preserves, he stood looking and wished that he might see the brothers themselves.

Other Special Displays.

There were many other special displays of unusual interest including the work of the students of the Crook County High School, fancy work that covered one side of the hall and other more useful representations of domestic work, in other words, cooking.

As might be expected at a fair coming barely two weeks before an election there were candidates of all kinds in Redmond on Saturday. They were not interested in vegetables and the live stock so much as in the voter and his thoughts. They met everybody and hung blue ribbons on them all, at the same time urging a return of the compliment on November 3.

With so many of the events of the day free to all it was difficult to estimate how many were present at the fair. There were many hundreds surely and they came from all sides. Both hotels were crowded and the side walks were filled all the time. From Bend a good crowd attended and all were well entertained.
