GOOD ADVICE GIVEN FOR LOCAL FARMERS

COUNTY AGRICULTURIST LOVETT WRITES OF ORGANIZED EFFORT AND ON A VALUABLE BUT LITTLE APPRECIATED, CROP FOR HAY OR SEED—ADVICE ON BUYING SEED

Field Peas.

The field pea is a crop that is little appreciated in Central Oregon, and it is a very valuable crop for us to grow in this section. It will prove a very valuable crop either for hay or seed on irrigated land. It is especially valuable on our dry farming lands and may be grown on the summer fallow without materially affecting the moisture contained in the soil for the small grain. On irrigated land the peas may be sown or drilled at the rate of 3 bushel per acre. By sowing these peas in early March and following 10 days later with about 50 pounds of oats drilled crosswise a very valuable hay may be obtained. On dry farm lands the peas should be sown in double drilled rows about 28 inches apart, sowing about 2 bushel per acre. They should not be planted later than March for best results. They are sown in double drilled rows by stepping up the holes in the drill to the required depth of rows. They should be planted in double rather than single rows in order that they may be better protected from growing upright and to withstand the wind. They should be planted about 4 inches deep, after the land has been thoroughly disked. They are a quick growing crop and require comparatively little moisture. They should be planted early because they will stand the frost and will not stand hot dry weather.

At least one car load of field peas should be planted in this county next spring. By buying a car load we can obtain this seed for 3 cents per pound.

I shall be very glad to receive the names of those wishing to obtain good field peas seed for spring planting, and if we can secure orders enough for the purchasing of a car load of seed we should be able to save ourselves several dollars.

Organized Effort.

There is something wrong with our method of doing business on the farm; because of this, the farmer loses money not only when he buys his seed or feed, but also when he sells the products of his farm. When he wants seed for any farm crop he usually goes to local dealers and buys a small amount at retail prices. When he has crops to sell he must depend upon the local market for what he has and take the prices which the local market offer. The merchant or dealer with which the farmer trades cannot be blamed for the prices he asks or for the prices paid, as he makes a very small margin of profit in either case.

I have found during the past season two farmers living within six miles of each other, one having good seed oats, and the other wishing good seed. The one with the oats could find no other buyer than the dealer in town and must take the price of common oats for the seed which would have been grown a profitable crop for his neighbor. The other was compelled to go to a local dealer and pay a seed oats' price. Could these two men have found each other, both would have profited by meeting. Taking field peas as an example; in a seed catalogue, I find field peas quoted at 30 cents per pound, at $2.75 per 100 pounds, and the same can be purchased at 3 cents a pound by earload lots. This means a saving of over two thirds in the purchasing by the larger lots. If 1000 pounds of this seed were purchased in pound lots it would cost the farmer $200. If he bought by the ear load it would cost him only $30.00. It illustrates very strongly the point I wish to make—it would pay the farmer to get together and purchase their seed in large lots.

Taking potatoes as an example of the farm products, I have inquired of local markets in this county and found that while one market would pay only 30 cents per 100 for potatoes, another was paying $1.50 per 100. If the farmers were organized and knew these things possibly all of them might receive the highest prices for every pound of potatoes they could produce. The majority of men on the farm are not using the best seed for the raising of their crops. In consequence a large number of our crops are low in yield and poor in quality. Could we as farmers get together and determine what varieties of crops pay, and buy our seed together, then, through organized effort, discover the best market and deliver to that market a standard product it would almost double the profits at present realized on our farms in this section. We as farmers are greatly handicapped because of lack of organization in our business. It is a part of the work of the county agriculturist to assist in the organization of farmers for the betterment of their conditions and the increase of their profits. Suggestions are always in order and I should like very much to get in touch with any farmers which are interested in an organization of this kind.
