HELP FOR THE SETTLER.

So far as it is possible to judge by reports in the Portland newspapers the chief attention of the Irrigation Congress was given up to a discussion of how to get more money to start more irrigation projects and reclaim more of the arid lands of the state. This is as it should be. No money can be spent by the state or the United States to produce results more worth while than such projects. They provide homes, they make ownership of productive land easy for the energetic settler, they add to our supplies of food.

In considering only new projects, however, and ways and means of their construction, the Congress lost sight of one of the most deplorable matters that has ever existed in the state—the situation of the settlers on the unfinished Carey act projects, chiefly in this and adjoining counties.

The Tumalo Project was completed by the state in satisfaction of its moral obligation to the settlers on the Carey act, Columbia Southern company and, in the well deserved acclaim of the work and the engineer who did it, this fact should not be lost sight of. The truly big thing about the whole enterprise is not so much that so many thousand acres have been reclaimed or that the cost was so many dollars under the estimates. It is that a handful of settlers who bought water rights in the confidence that the state of Oregon was behind the company with which they dealt found their confidences ultimately not misplaced.

There are other projects in a cond'tion like that of the Tumalo before the state stepped in. Possibly in not so bad a condition but yet one which causes settlers on them constant worry and impedes the proper development of the country. The obligation of the state in the case of these is no different from what it was on the Tumalo.

The Irrigation Congress paid no attention to them. Cannot the legislature take some action? If money is to be appropriated cannot it be for the benefit of settlers now on the grounds? Cannot they be helped?

Whatever is done about the millage recommended for irrigation purposes cannot a small sum be appropriated for use in a co-operative inventigation of the existing projects which will result in a definite statement of facts concerning them and provide a hasis on which the Desert Land Board can work and future plans be made?

The Bulletin has been asked to call attention to the fact that a number of farmers who are selling seed grain have not taken the trouble to have the seed properly cleaned and that as a result weeds may become lodged in the buyer's fields. A state law forbids the sale of seed in Oregon containing certain weed seeds and beyond this it is open to every buyer to have the seed tested at the agricultural college. Between the legal injunction on the seller and the opportunity for tests which the buyer has our fields ought to be kept free from weeds.

The selection of Lair Thompson of this district as President of the Senate is a matter of satisfaction to Central Oregonians. Mr. Thompson's record as a legislator has stamped him as a man of ability and action. and his appointment to his present position of power, while a foregone conclusion, is none the less acceptable. Nor is there doubt that should the Lakeview senator care to continue his public life, it will lead him to larger things.

In getting representation from the west side on the county court one object of county division is gained.
