ELECTRICITY AND WATER.

Little Danger in Turning a Hose or

Heavily Charged Wires. The slight danger that firemen run through the electric current passing from neavily charged wires up the stream of eater they are squirting is proved by an experiment conducted by Ugo Tartagilni and reported in La Scienza per Tutti

A trolley car wire charged with a di rect current of 525 voits had one end grounded; on the other end he directed a strenm from a hose with a pozzie teen millimeters in diameter. At 2.2 meters distance a columeter attached to the numbe registered twenty vous At sixty-five centimeters distance it registered seventy volts and at twenty centimeters 210 volts. The average man can stand a current of fifty voits with out serious shock, so a firemen who tolds his nozzie tive or six feet from a live wire runs no great danger.

Mr. Turinglint made the same experi ment on two lines of afternating cur rent, one with 2.300, the other with 1000 voits, and the volumeter did not register may current in the stream of water, although a slight shock was per eptible when he put his hand into it
