DO IT NOW.

The silver lining to the economic cloud of the twelve months now ended is that the good things dawdling for Bend come at this time chiefly not because of present prosperity but because of their very absurdity, at least in a great measure.

When the pendulum of price swings far in the nether direction the wise man buys. When the cost of labor and machinery is low, when the market for the product is on the face of it unencouraging, the far-sighted investor builds his manufacturing plant.

For those who are able, such times as these offer the big opportunities. The very stagnation, the apathy of the "other fellow" the fact that the business world generally is "holding back" makes the openings for the progressive doer of deeds all the more conspicuous.

Those who are stepping into the field here are careful business men. They see their opportunity and they have the courage to grasp it, where less sturdy commercial pioneers would falter for lack of will, and others perforce would hold back for lack of cash. They are to be congratulated for their get-there spirit—a spirit and an example which will out heart into many another. And Bend is to be congratulated upon having such men at the helm of our timber development.

When it is very dark, prepare for dawn. It has been very dark. Dawn is breaking. The big men see the beginning for a period of action, and the smaller well may prepare to follow in their wake. For Bend "Do It Now," well may become a slogan—provided that we do it sanely.

PREVENTING FIRES.

Portland's new fire marshal is making a thorough survey of the entire city. Inspectors are examining every building and checking on every fire risk. The authorities are compelling the repair of dangerous fires, the installation of adequate fire protection, the cleaning up of alleys and backyards where accumulation of refuse is a menace. In short, Portland has wisely decided that prevention is the best cure. It proposes to lose less money through fires by having fewer fires—and the easiest way to cut down the number is to make it harder for fires to start.

It would be a mighty good thing for Bend to follow suit. During the afternoons the city marshal is not over burdened with duties. He could devote his time to no better advantage than in making a house to house canvass of the town, examining the condition of stoves, furnaces and stoves, recommending clean-ups where they are needed and otherwise seeing where easy steps for fire prevention might be taken.

The people would appreciate it, and especially the property owners. All of us would rather be told that our buildings needed a little improvement—even though we grumbled at the time—than to suffer losses later. The insurance companies, too, appreciate that sort of watchfulness, and if it is thorough enough rates are apt to be reduced here and there. Altogether, it would be a good step which would hurt no one and benefit all.

TAKE THE PLEDGE.

The Northwest is on the upgrade again. We have turned the corner and bright prospects lie before us. For Bend this is, of course, especially and notably true, because of our local developments, but for the entire country it is also true, and according to the measure of prosperity about us, so also shall our own substantial success be the greater and the sounder. Read this from a recent Oregonian editorial, and then take the pledge of optimism:

"The late business depression was due to two sets of causes, one economic, the other psychological. The economic causes have been removed and have been supplanted by other forces creative of prosperity, but the psychological causes persist. That is the only reason why prosperity returns with a somewhat slow and halting step. Thinking hard times has become so habitual that we continue to think them after all excuse for so thinking has passed away. We need but to reverse the course of our thoughts and we shall drive hard times away."

William Roscoe Nelson, editor and owner of the Kansas City Star, died recently and everyone who knew of him and what he and his paper have stood for and accomplished sorrowed at his going. The Star among many other admirable activities, has at all times campaigned vigorously for community betterment. Physical civic cleanliness, as well as political, is its hobby, and here are seven commandments recently published which are worth noting and abiding by.

Thou shalt honor thy neighborhood and keep it clean.

Remember thy cleaning-day and keep it wholly.

Thou shalt take care of thy rubbish-heap; else thy neighbor will bear witness against thee.

Thou shalt keep in order thy alley, thy back yard, thy hall, and thy stairway.

Thou shalt not let the wicked fly breed.

Thou shalt not kill thy neighbor by ignoring fire menaces or by poisoning the air with rubbish and garbage.

Thou shalt not keep thy windows closed day and night.

In Lemmon, South Dakota, the city operates a municipal saloon. San Antonio, Texas, has a municipal bat roost. Lemmon finds it pays to handle the booze business, both in cash and in reducing its bad effects to the minimum. The Texans have demonstrated that the bat is a useful bird and more than pays for the protection given it by destroying mosquitoes and other pests. What next?

It takes ten mills to make a cent. But it doesn't take much sense to know that one mill will go a long way toward making a first rate town.

"The mills of the gods grind slowly," we read. But after all we're more interested in the Shevils!

According to that table, each Crook county citizen owes $11.31. Don't we wish that was all!

Did anyone in Bend say "baseball"? If not, why not?

A boom for the river, too.

One calls for two.

LANDS TO BE OPENED.

(The Oregonian.) WASHINGTON, D. C., May 1.—On June 19, 60,000 acres of non-irrigable land in Morrow, Crook and Gilliam counties, Oregon, will be opened to entry, under the enlarged homestead law.

OPENING IS POSTPONED.

Because of the inclement weather on Saturday the opening of the East Side playground was postponed until Saturday, May 8. At this time the exercises planned for last Saturday will be carried out.

VICTOR HUGO AT LIEGE.

His First Impression of the Busy City as Seen at Night.

Shortly after the Franco-Prussian war Victor Hugo, the French poet, visited Belgium and subsequently wrote of his journey:

"The shadow of evening drew over the wild reared blowing; lights burned dimly in neighboring houses, every thing became half lost in the dark. The newspapers said, 'We shall be as large in an hour'."

"At that moment, at the foot of the hills, which seemed dark and unworldly, two round heads of fire and dense gleams like the eyes of stars by the roadside rose a trifling distance above the level, surrounded by a haze that had a sinister red-tinted appearance, for a rapid. Beyond hidden in the shadows, was a mouth of fire that which suddenly opened and shot, and with hissing sound, spouted forth a tongue of fire. It was the lighting of the fireworks."

"After passing the spot called Fiamelle the night was unexpectedly most different. All the valley seemed to be in a state of commotion, smoke arising from this place and flames arising from that; in fact, we could imagine that a hostile army had ravaged the country, and that twenty destructions presented to the night and darkness all the aspects and phases of devastating conflagration—some just catching fire, some straggled in smoke, others swept or engulfed by flames."

"This aspect of war is caused by peace—this terrifying similitude of destruction is the effect of industry."
