WEDNESDAY, NOV. 24, 1915.

TREAT THEM WELL.

"It's always interesting to contrast expressions towards the railroad before and after its arrival. As a rule, every community desiring a railroad will talk as nice as pie to get one, and then after it comes and can't be taken away, it is fashionable to complain about the service, demand a brick depot and insist upon extensions."

So says the Oregon Voter, and we say "Amen."

But we venture to add that Bend has proven an exception to this rule so well expounded by C. C. C.

Heaven knows we wanted the roads—we still want 'em—more of them—south, southeast, east and west—there is nothing mean about us when it comes to the wishing game and railroads are in the air. Individually and collectively, we of Bend are the champion catch-as-catch-can, self-starting, non-skid, air-cooled railroad wishers of the west.

The point is that Bend today speaks as well of her railroads as when they were dream-hopes, "way back in 1909. The people of Bend don't berate them, and The Bulletin always tries to have a kind word on tap. Just now we're all especially pleased because Bend is beginning to furnish more tonnage for our railroads than most all the rest of the Deschutes lines put together, and that is gratifying—just as it must be for the railroad folks to have a slight enough business to pay expenses.

Our railroads treat us reasonably decently, and we're trying to reciprocate. And the spirit of Bend toward the roads should be the united spirit of the community toward all big investors—for it is the men who come here with their money and sink it in Bend to whom we shall owe most the material upbuilding of the town.

Let Bend receive and maintain a reputation for square dealing with capital—a reputation lacking in many a western community—and that will be for us a finer and more profitable advertisement than almost any other.

"STRONG BACKING FOR STRAHORN."

Under this caption the Oregonian says editorially of the meeting here last Wednesday:

"Speeches delivered at the Bend meeting give much encouragement to hope that Mr. Strahorn's Central Oregon railroad enterprise will be carried out. The people of that section pledged Mr. Strahorn the support which their well-known public spirit and energy would lead one to expect, but more important still, the speech of Mr. Mills puts the Portland banks behind the project and thereby greatly enhanced its prospects of success."

"With the financial backing of the state's greatest banks thus pledged and with the residents of the country to be traversed by the road behind it to the extent of their powers, Mr. Strahorn will be well fortified to go into the money market for the remaining capital. The first requisites are that enough traffic be in sight to pay operating expenses and interest, and that the people representing the project prove their faith by providing a substantial portion of the money. As a practical railroad man, Mr. Strahorn is in a position to make the showing of traffic and of early increase by development and irrigation. The endorsement of Mr. Mills as a banker and his pledge to "get in the game" should remove any doubt as to Oregon's willingness and ability to furnish its share of the money. When this evidence has been put in concrete shape, the way should be clear for the enterprise to go ahead."

The Oregon Journal walls because state money has been appropriated to build roads in Crook county with "lava ash." When its voice was first raised it talked about "lava rock." Some day it may get its facts straight and find out just what it is proposed to build the roads with.

COMMITTEE TO AID STRAHORN.

Aside from the discussion of the Benham Falls lands, reported elsewhere in this paper, the only business to be transacted at Saturday's meeting of the Commercial Club was the passage of a motion that President Keyes appoint a committee from the club to confer with Mr. Strahorn and assist in any way desired in connection with the new railroad. Mr. Keyes expects to appoint the committee on his return from his trip to Portland.

Norman H. Bean, an artist in brick and stone work, has just arrived from Pasadena, California, and is prepared to show the people of Bend what can be done in building with local stone. If you want work well done drop him a card at the post office.—Adv.

colonization of lands, and the many other development projects in sight without which the railroads cannot be built and would not pay if they were built.

"Second, your most supreme effort to assist in the initial and independent financing, construction and operation, so that all may be done in the most economical way possible.

"Third, your ready acquiescence in and support of liberal rates which will be necessarily charged for all traffic during the pioneering period. Don't forget these resolutions made now when you are asked to go down into your pockets, or to go out for right-of-way and terminals and to get into other people's pockets, or when you come to pay your freight bills, or are asked to help out with the State Commission and the Assessors. For, recollect, it is to be your road, in your country and for your aid in this your time of need. In all of this depend upon me to strain every nerve to help to the very end, but don't expect the impossible—that is for me to pull this through without your measuring up to all these conditions. But thus pulling together we will create here a railway system and a new empire of which notice will be taken far from the confines of Central Oregon."

Dealing with specific facts as to the railroad income to be derived, O. Laurgaard urged the completion of various irrigation projects which would bring 500,000 acres into production. "Railroad officials figure," said Mr. Laurgaard, "that their income from irrigation projects is from $5 to $8 per acre. With these projects completed there would be, then, an income of from $25,000,000 to $40,000,000 for the new road from this source alone."

The concluding speech of the evening was made by C. S. Hudson, who told something of the investigations Mr. Strahorn had made before taking up the project, and paying high tribute to the railroad builder. In closing Mr. Hudson presented Mr. Strahorn with a large key made of Deschutes white pine, and suitably inscribed.
