Now that the election draws near there is beginning to be some discussion of the things to be voted on.

The policies and acts of Woodrow Wilson are arousing the most interest. A large poster on the front porch of the Gist Hotel is provoking arguments both for and against.

County division pops up occasionally, but there is much less agitation over this measure than there was two years ago. This apathy is attributed by the friends of the measure to the fact that many, both of the friends and also the enemies of the measure, believe it will carry by a large majority in the proposed new county.

There are those also who believe that the majority should rule in this matter as well as in other public matters, and since over 62 per cent of the people of the proposed new county stood for division two years ago, they are willing that division should carry this time. Again there are those who know that until division began to be agitated this end of the county received nothing like the amount of money for improvements that it paid in in taxes. They know that if Redmond now "kills the measure for a long time," it will be a long time in that case before we again receive our due proportion of the county money used for public works. These people do not again wish to pay tribute to Redmond and Prineville.
