 + MORE ATTENTION TO SEED +
 + Higher Varieties Needed, Fewer +
 + Kinds and Better Acclimated. +
 *****

By County Agriculturalist R. A. Blanchard.

The spring of 1917 will soon be on us, with the usual attendant sowing for the year's crops. More land is being developed and larger crops will be planted than ever before. Tremendous quantities of seed are about to be brought in for sowing. Let us stop just a moment before we go into this thing in a wholesale way and consider a few things. One of the mistakes most frequently made by new countries like ours in the promiscuous use of any kind of seed. Most of us, in spite of the fact that we came from various states in the east and naturally have a preference for certain varieties we used back there, have at last realized that there are certain kinds of grain, vegetables, and forage crops that are better adapted to this country because of their superior hardiness. We know that the plant that will do best for this country is that kind that has been grown in this country, or a place of similar conditions and has become adjusted to our climate. Especially is this so in dry farming. One of the best services that can be rendered to a community is the establishment of a few hardy varieties that will become standard for their agriculture. Such service has been attempted by the Harney branch experiment station and such people as C. H. Erickson, of Bear Creek Buttes, F. S. Towner, of Prineville, and the Bend Flour Mill Co. who have always been quick to render assistance in introducing the best varieties.

In the light of the work done in Central Oregon, the following varieties give best results: Wheat, Early Baart, Bluestem and Marquis; Oats, Sixty Day; Barley, Swanneck, Hannehen and White Smyrna; Peas, Carleton, Cossack, Gray Winter and Keiser. There will be thousands of pounds of seeds sown here this year, and it will be a serious mistake to purchase these seeds blindly, from any section of the United States, as is the present indication. The price too often governs the purchase. Good seed is cheap at any cost. All alfalfa is not just alfalfa; there is a vast difference in the variety, too. Early Baart wheat brought in from the east and south, is vastly different from that same variety grown right here, or in countries of similar characteristics. This very fact has afforded considerable argument, and many times the condemnation of a good thing. There will be sown approximately 40,000 pounds of alfalfa seed this spring. It is of the utmost importance that farmers pay considerable attention to the source of this stuff. Much of it will be sold from the south and is a mistake we should avoid. In selecting seed, I am almost tempted to say, pay more attention to the source as compared with our conditions, than the mere name it bears, there being so much difference in the same variety which is due partly to environment and partly to carelessness.

The office of county agriculturalist is making an effort this year to investigate the sources and quality of the following seeds: Alfalfa, Sweet Clover, Red, Mammoth, Crimson, Alsike and Common Clover, Field Peas, Wheat, Oats, Barley, Rye, and other minor crops, for the use of farmers when making up their club orders this spring.
