

COUNTY TO AID IN ROAD WORK

$800 WILL BE MATCHED AGAINST WORK DONE BY RESIDENTS BETWEEN TERREHONNE AND LOWER BRIDGE.

(From Thursday's Daily.)

Provisions for the improvement of the Lower Bridge-Terrebonne road were made today when the Deschutes county court met in adjourned session. It was decided that for every dollar's worth of work furnished by the residents of the section, a like amount of cash would be put up by the county, the entire appropriation, however, not to exceed $800. The matter of the Jaeger road was continued because of misunderstanding as to the width of the highway.

The matter of the adjustment of taxes on Melrose Park in Redmond, reducing from a city lot to an acreage basis, discussed at the last meeting of the court, was taken up, and the petition made by Thomas W. Marshall, owner of the property, granted. The vacation of certain streets and roads in Redmond was also ordered.

BITTERS DRINKER GETS HEAVY FINE FROM CITY JUDGE

John Maloney Admits Intoxication, But Pleads He Took Too Much for Stomach Trouble.

(From Friday's Daily.)

Admitting that he had become intoxicated on stomach bitters, John Maloney, a farm hand working near Bend, arrested last night by Officer Willard Houston, was fined $50 and given a 20 day jail sentence this morning by Municipal Judge H. C. Ellis. In addition, he must pay $15 of a previous fine, and serve a 10 day sentence suspended in January on his promise of good behavior after conviction on a similar charge.

Maloney was able to recall having purchased only one bottle of bitters, in spite of the fact that a half emptied flask and a full one were found on him at the time of his arrest. He protested that he had taken the bitters "for his stomach's sake," but admitted that he had gone too strong.

POTATOES

(By M. G. Coe.)

This is the first of a series of articles to be published by the "Better Potato Contest" committee, relating to the needs of this particular section in potato raising. The committee does not presume to tell the experienced farmer how to handle all the details of potato culture. But the idea is to gain thoughtful attention to these details, so that the methods and practices adopted will be the result of close study and experience.

Care of Seed Potatoes. Probably the greatest sin of potato growers is one of omission. The neglectful practice of permitting seed potatoes to sprout prematurely in the dark is without reason. It would be more economical to leave a part of the crop undug, to rot and enrich the soil, than it is to suffer a needless loss through sprouting, after the backaches required to harvest the entire crop.

The start and early growth of the plant depends upon the food stored in the planted piece. The young plant is especially dependent upon this food supply if the soil is too wet, too cold or poorly prepared. All the energy in the seed piece is needed to produce thrifty plants with consequent heavy yields. This applies especially to this section where growing conditions are often unfavorable.

Besides a loss of food to the plant, there is another reason why a sprout should never be broken from a seed potato, if the best results are to be obtained. When one shoot is broken off, two or more spring from one eye, these if broken are replaced in turn by a greater number. The result is more stalks to the hill, but weaker stalks, many small potatoes, with but few that are of merchantable size.

The season is backward and even yet there may be time to retard the sprouting. If the eyes are becoming active in the cellar, it may be possible to spread them out in a thin layer and let in the light. This will make the shoots grow more slowly, and make them more stocky. It has been conclusively proved that potatoes sprouted in the light, will yield better than those not so sprouted. However, it is not practical to plant potatoes with long sprouts on any extensive scales, in this country where wages are high. So it is necessary that they be kept cool whether in the light or dark.

It may be necessary to bury the sprouting potatoes on some northern slope in the shade where the ground is cold. They may also be kept dormant in the pit, by covering the ground while it is still cold, with a layer of straw, vines or litter, held in place with a thin layer of earth. Or the pit may be shaded with green juniper boughs held in place by a few stones.

Preparation of the Ground.

There is another faulty practice prevalent in this district which is also one of omission. This consists in giving the ground no previous working before the potatoes are planted, when they are dropped in every third furrow, as the ground receives its first plowing. By this method the ground below the potato receives no cultivation, and the plant roots must penetrate unworked soil. By simply plowing them in, it is difficult to obtain straight rows or an even depth of planting. The most successful growers first plow and thoroughly prepare the ground. Then if a planter is not used, the land is marked out in furrows and the seed dropped and covered. Extra cultivation will pay better before planting than after. It is one time you can cultivate under the plant and not disturb the roots. There are few potato growing districts of any importance where the ground is not plowed before planting. In fact it is the best practice to plow soil and for potatoes shallow the preceding fall, and then deeply before planting.

The committee will endeavor to throw light upon any questions asked by contestants through the columns of the weekly papers, by citing results obtained at experiment stations, bearing upon the subject.

Address communications to "Better Potato Contest Committee," M. G. Coe, chairman.
