THE SISTERS FAIR.

The Fourth Annual Sisters Fair will be the attraction toward the end of next month, and already the live boosters of that good country are preparing to make the 1917 event even more notable than its predecessors.

Somehow, those folks over at Sisters, like their Tumalo neighbors, have a way of going after things which wins admiration and makes it increasingly easy for them to secure the hearty co-operation of the citizens of Bend. After all, our interests are identical, and what helps one helps both.

And that is why the paragraphs quoted below, which are taken from the publication issued by the Fair Association last year, strike us as so mighty worth reading:

"In extending to the public a general invitation to attend the Fourth Annual Sisters Fair we feel sure that if you attend you will not only be well paid for your time and trouble, but at the same time will be helping a most worthy cause.

"To the exhibitor we wish to say that we trust you do not feel as though your efforts in gathering exhibit material are all for the purpose of securing the nominal prizes offered. We consider the success of the enterprise means added valuation to your lands, a bigger and better fair each year and eventually returns to the whole community that will well pay you for your efforts.

"The Sisters Fair Association was not organized with the idea of making it a money making institution, neither did the stockholders purchase their shares of stock with the idea of making money out of them. The object was the betterment of the community at large and to demonstrate to both local and outside visitors what our resources are and at the same time encourage the producer in improving the grade of his produce."

Fairs are, as well said, co-operative enterprises. As such, they can, and do, accomplish a world of good for the communities where they are held and for the country round about. And they are first rate advertisements for their home county.
