

FIRE PERIL NOW AT THE MINIMUM

(From Monday's Daily.)
Heavy rains in the mountains have brought the fire danger down several notches, and according to Acting Supervisor V. V. Harpham, of the Deschutes National Forest, the chance of a recurrence of fire has reached the minimum for the season. Fire lookouts will not be taken off at once, however, but will be left on for a time, as they can be advantageously used for improvement work on the forest.
