GROWTH OF CITY.

list of achievements. The district has risen from second class to first and in recognition of this, has been permitted to have a school board with five members instead of three. Modern practices have been introduced, domestic science, manual training and public speaking having been added to the course of study. A primary supervisor was recently installed in order to bring about a uniformity in the method of instruction.

SENATOR McNARY TELLS OF OREGON IN RECENT INTERVIEW

He speaks from practical experience, being the owner of a beautiful piece of farmland, just above Salem, known as The Forks. Among the numerous products he raises are some of the finest pears and other fruits in the west. He is well versed in horticulture, and in addition to having made unusual and very successful experiments in walnut planting, and being the author of several articles on filbert culture, he has exhibited at the fairs throughout the state, and is highly thought of by experts in the agricultural industry.

"Farmers," he continued, "have plenty of time to read. In a great metropolis the people labor day in and day out, whereas in the country we have long winter evenings and rainy days when no work can be done. The farmers put in their time reading, not only the metropolitan dailies, but also farm journals and scientific periodicals. Contrary to the general impression, they are rather better acquainted with existing conditions than the inhabitants of the cities. And again, out west there is not the large foreign population such as you have in the east. The interests of the people are in the main identical; there is more homogeneity of thought and purpose. There are not so many conflicting elements. This makes for a clearer vision of their requirements, and progressive legislation is accomplished much more easily.

"We have the initiative, referendum and recall, workmen's compensation law, woman suffrage, and many other equally beneficial features." I asked him whether he thought the press really molded public opinion to any appreciable degree in the large cities.

"Well" he replied, smilingly whimsically, "I believe you may know more about that than I; but I rather think the editors of the great dailies, as well as the reportorial writers, accurately gauge public sentiment, and conduct their columns accordingly, thereby obtaining the hearty indorsement of their readers. "I have always had the greatest confidence in the ability of the American people to decide great questions for themselves. And as time goes on this impression becomes, if possible, stronger and stronger."

It was with the manner of one who has given long and serious thought to the subject that he made this statement. He said it with the air of a man who is quietly proud to represent a body of American citizens. And the governor of Oregon could have selected no better representative. His endeavors in the senate have been consistently toward the betterment of conditions, not only in the west but throughout the nation.

When first appointed to the senate he stated emphatically that it was his strong intention to support the President to the best of his ability in the prosecution of the war. He is heartily in favor of placing the burden of taxation upon those who are best able to bear it, especially concerns and individuals deriving the greatest monetary benefit, and he cast his vote for the bill which Senator Johnson offered to tax heavily all excess profits.

He is a firm believer in woman suffrage and prohibition.

Aside from the immediate legislation pertaining to the war, he is very desirous of facilitating the development of Alaska. Something has been done in this direction, but it is so large a project and so worthy that the senator is anxious to give it greater impetus.

Considering his great interest in farming, it is but natural that he should do everything in his power to obtain an appropriation for the reclamation of the western arid lands. He has already introduced a bill asking for $20,000,000 to be devoted to
