WAKED UP.

(From Monday's Daily.)
Whatever may be the result of the coming election the agitation for and against the proposed new tax levy has been of invaluable educational benefit to the citizens of Bend. Now for the first time many, who never thought of the matter before, have some idea of what the cost of city operation is. They know what the city is paying in interest on bonded debt. They begin to understand the relation between a low valuation and a high levy and they are paying attention to the question of how operating revenue shall be obtained.

The situation today is in nowise different from that which existed eight months ago. At that time about $17,000 in warrants was outstanding and the needs of the city for the months remaining before the next tax revenue was due were unprovided for. Refunding bonds were proposed and issued without a word of protest from those who now insist it is the wrong way to pay the city bills, which of course it is, and not a word was said about future economy.

The reason for this was the fact that the tax payers were not paying any attention eight months ago to the city's financial situation. Now they are waked up and while it is too late to close the barn door through which the last horse was stolen they can see to it that the other horses do not follow the same course.

To vote down the measure for the higher tax on Friday will not be doing this, however. Our bills are contracted and our 1917 expenses must be met. The higher tax will pay the bills and part of this year's expense. Now that the people are waked up, the thing for them to do is to see that this year's expense is kept at the very minimum. Everything but the absolutely essential must be cut out. Not a cent must be spent above the budget. Only in that way will we ever come out on top of our debt and get in position to take care of the future.

Cuddigan, a brakeman working with the switch crew in the local railroad yards, last night caught his foot in the lower step on a freight car, and losing his balance, was dragged along the track on his back. Bruises and minor injuries resulted from the fall, but Mr. Cuddigan is reported recovering without suffering any serious effects. The accident occurred about 11 o'clock last night when the brakeman was climbing off a car.
