HOW IS IT USED?

"Why should the money a candidate has earned be any more tainted than that which another candidate has married," asks a local paper. Yes, "candidate" is what it said, probably because of a cinder in the eye. The reference is to Robert N. Stanfield, candidate for the Republican nomination for senator.

Now to start out no one had anything to say about this candidate's money being "tainted." A year ago, when Stanfield was making his big pile, he was looked on as a very daring and skilful speculator. It was known that he was buying wool and sheep everywhere, all he could get, and as the market continued to rise and he held to his purchases it was realized that he must be making a lot of money. A million or more, it has been estimated.

There was not much thought then about this million being "tainted." It was come by honestly, although in speculation, and no one thought much about it until the price of woolen goods began to go up, and the Red Cross began to pay high for the yarns it was using for sweaters and socks for the soldiers. Then there was talk of "profiteering." No one has yet given a complete definition of the word, but some folks thought that it applied to Mr. Stanfield, and his friend Chapman, in the Oregon Voter, put in some time explaining. Because of this lack of a definition Chapman used many words which helped fill his magazine but did not get very far into his subject. "Tainted" money and "profiteering," however, are not the words which raise the questions now before the Republican voters of Oregon. How Mr. Stanfield earned his money is important and whether or not it is "tainted" depends on how he earned it. When a definition for "profiteering" is agreed upon we may be able to say whether the money is "tainted." But the most important question now is how Mr. Stanfield is using his money in connection with his candidacy for the Republican nomination.

Mr. Stanfield wants to be United States senator. Mr. Stanfield has a lot of money that came to him easily. Is he using it as he ought not to use it? Is he going to be nominated because he is the right man or because he has a lot of money and is willing to spend it? What show would a poor man have? If of equal ability with Stanfield, but poor, would another have a chance against him?

S. B. Huston has just withdrawn from the race. Suppose he had started out with the money and Stanfield with none. Who would now be withdrawing, Stanfield or Huston?

This is the point as we see it. From the time when a copy of the Stanfield Standard was sent under regular postage rates to every voter, or every registered Republican voter in the state, saying that Stanfield was getting ready to run for something but did not yet know just what, through the day when every newspaper in the state carried his announcement advertisement, the day when the papers that had been against him began to flop, right down to the present time, this candidate's boom has been built on the money he was spending.

True, he has made friends by his personality and charm, but the greatest factor in his campaign has been the money he has spent. And because the people of Oregon are suspicious of the use of money in any great quantity for political purposes this will be the factor that counts most against him on election day.

How much has been spent in Deschutes county we do not know, but we imagine there are those in Bend who have a pretty good idea. Will they come forth and tell us just how much has been put up and what has been done with it?

SENATOR McNARY.

(Portland Telegram.)

In making a choice among the candidates for the United States senatorship to be voted for at the primaries May 17, what better guide is there than fitness for the duties of that high office? If proved fitness is to be the test the nomination should go to the incumbent, Charles L. McNary. He has shown a good grasp on national questions which relate to the war and to peace conditions. He is keenly alive to the interests of Oregon. He is industrious, well poised and energetic. He is progressive, with no tendency toward radicalism. His character is the highest and his views broad. His record throughout his incumbency proves him to be a well balanced, useful, patriotic representative of the people of Oregon. His work has been without the slightest flaw.

It is true to say that good service to the state and the nation can be rendered only by men who have become familiar with official life at Washington. Senator McNary has the experience which equips him for more effective work in the future than he has been able to do in the past. It would not be wise for the state of Oregon to underestimate the value of that experience. If he is nominated Senator McNary will be elected. His term will cover the period of the war, and the beginning of the period of reconstruction after the war, and Oregon should avail herself of the services of a strong man in the upper house of congress. McNary is that man.

MILITARY FUNERAL HELD AT REDMOND

(From Saturday's Daily.)

The first military funeral to be held in Deschutes county was held at Redmond yesterday afternoon over the remains of Albert Ray Johnson, whose death occurred at Norfolk, Virginia. Mr. Johnson was one of the first men in Deschutes county to answer the call, enlisting in the navy. Several weeks ago he contracted pneumonia, which later caused his death at Norfolk. His body was shipped to Redmond, his home, for interment.

ants take some such action and I will see that the lid is bolted down tight in Deschutes county. No matter how loudly some folks say 'hurrah,' they will absolutely not do anything that will in the least touch their stomachs. If the boys in the trenches can eat bullets I can eat anything that the government says I ought to eat. The time is here for every man to go to war, go to work, or go to jail, and for every woman who runs a kitchen to use substitutes, whole substitutes and nothing but substitutes."
