DIAMOND LAKE.

In connection with Wednesday's action by the Commercial club in favor of the extension of the boundaries of Crater Lake national park the following editorial from the Klamath Herald is of interest. Says the Herald:

"Klamath County needs no urging to get back of the proposition to place Diamond Lake within the Crater Lake National park. It is one of the many priceless scenic treasures of the state. It rightfully belongs within the park with its twin wonder—Crater Lake. And it is going to be there if the people of Klamath County can induce the government to extend the national park boundaries to include it. There is not one real argument against it, and there are scores in favor of it."

"Director of National Parks Mather has promised that he will use his influence in favor of constructing a highway that will connect the two lakes, and that means that the highway will be built, for Mather has a record of accomplishing everything he has ever started to do. And he says he has been convinced that the inclusion of Diamond Lake within the Crater Lake Park is a very desirable thing."

"Every resident of Klamath County who is interested in this change should write to Congressman Sinnott and urge him to get back of the proposition. He is chairman of the public lands committee of the house. He will be one of the most powerful factors in bringing about this change. With his support and that of Mr. Mather, it will be a very easy matter to accomplish the task—provided the people of this part of Oregon show any disposition to want it. It will cost you but two cents and a little time to have Diamond Lake opened to the world and to you. Isn't it worth it. If it is, then get busy."

All that the Herald says concerning the importance of the park to Klamath is equally true here in Deschutes.

THE BUZZARD PRESS.

The partisan press of the United States has made a sad spectacle of itself over President Wilson's illness.

Both the Democratic and the Republican papers have seemed to take the president's condition as a political matter, entirely. By sticking to the meagre facts found in the physicians' daily bulletins and avoiding speculation as to what might lie back of them the Democratic newspapers have tended to minimize the illness and, by the same token, its effect on party politics. Many, it is true, continue to be what they always were, straightforward newspapers, and these printed the news without reference to any political effect. With Republican papers that did the same thing they showed themselves worthy of the trust of their readers.

What shall be said, however, of those Republican papers that magnified the malady that kept Mr. Wilson in bed? Over a space of nearly a week there kept coming from Washington correspondents to their rock-ribbed Republican sheets articles that must have been without one shred of truth. That Mr. Wilson was not only very sick, but if he lived he would never be able to continue in his presidential duties was the chief theme of these news buzzards, and they played on it until it was apparent that the patient was getting well. Since then there has been no word of explanation nor any excuse offered for putting out such stuff. Of course, there is none.

Any paper, however, that carried any of this doctored news owes its readers an apology and its Washington correspondents a reprimand, to say the least. It is such work that makes the newspaper reading public suspicious of what they read in a paper and never willing to accept it without reservations. If a paper has no interest in decent news reporting on its own account it ought to have enough regard for those that are jealous of the reputation of their news columns to try to keep out the stuff that has absolutely no basis in fact.

"I Do," has been suggested as a slogan for Portland. We'll say she does.

DAYLIGHT SAVING.

Before we forget altogether how daylight saving worked in the past summer, would it not be worth while considering the adoption of the plan as a local measure? In some cities, notably New York, it has already been decided to observe the daylight saving idea, in spite of the repeal of the national law, and in spite of the confusion that may be created because the plan will be only local. In other words, the benefits are expected to be greater than the inconveniences.

Would not this be the case in Bend? The only inconvenience we can foresee would be in connection with the local train schedules. Travelers might get somewhat mixed over the time of arrival and departure, but there would be no other difficulty.

On the other hand, the longer evening hours for all of us would be just as much appreciated as they have been in the past two years. For workers in the mills we should suppose the change would be especially desirable. Greater opportunity for recreation on the part of the day crews and a shorter period of work by artificial light for the night crews would seem to be worth while.

Because they represent the largest single class in the community, these are the people whose wishes on the subject ought to determine the answer. We would like to see a vote taken at the mills to ascertain the sentiment.

Says Fred Lockley in the Oregon Journal: "If Eastern and Central Oregon would adopt the French system what a grateful shade the double avenue of trees would furnish to travelers in midsummer. Local contractors could plant the trees and care for them, replacing any that failed to grow, for a period of two to three years. At the end of that time the money retained from their contract price could be delivered to them and the care of the trees could be turned over to the road supervisors. We should thus not only have beauty and comfort, but tourists would travel on roads of this character and spend their money with the hotels and garages en route. The expense would not be great but the benefits would be incalculable."

The chess board is the world, the pieces are the phenomena of the universe, the rules of the game are what we call the laws of Nature. The player on the other side is hidden from us. We know that his play is always fair, just and patient. But we also know, to our cost, that he never overlooks a mistake, or makes the smallest allowance for ignorance. To the man who plays well, the highest stakes are paid, with that sort of overflowing generosity with which the strong man shows delight in strength. And one who plays ill is checkmated—without haste, but without remorse.—Huxley.

When the Bend high school football team went to Klamath Falls to meet the high school team there the Klamath boys planned a dinner and a dance for them. Reporting this event the Klamath Herald said on Friday: "Regardless of the outcome of the game, the local boys plan not to be outdone by anyone in hospitality." There is the true sportsman's spirit and something of a contrast to the incident which occurred at the recent Bend-Frisville game, when a supporter of the Bend team, we regret to say, was guilty of gross discourtesy to a visitor.

The Bulletin was the first to urge improvement of the stock yards by the installation of scales, inauguration of mail delivery from Bend to Tumalo, the creation of a bird refuge on the river. It has repeatedly urged the importance of a rest room and the need of a change in the train service to Portland. It is therefore pleased to observe the attention being given to these matters by the city council and the Commercial club.

The bill providing for an exchange of cut-over land for national forest timber is still in committee, according to a report from Congressman Sinnott. It is to the interest of the community to obtain the passage of the bill, with the amendments suggested by the Commercial club committee, and every effort to this end should be made.

The canine sport in Silver Lake is chasing the pigs on the streets, according to the Leader. Having suggested to no avail that the pigs be kept shut up, the Leader now advocates having the dogs prohibited from running at large. What Silver Lake needs is a stable form of government.

How about enforcing the ordinance relating to the height of window awnings, or if there is no such ordinance, why not pass one? Folks should not have to duck and bend their way down the street to avoid being "beamed" by an awning.

A valley town reports that it has not been bothered much by the sugar shortage and that it was always possible to buy a dollar's worth. That may be. The trouble is that you get so darned little for the dollar.

Whatever may be the feeling about the League of Nations covenant all will agree that this month our country has a mandate for turkey.

A magazine article describes how to tell a cow's age. What we would like these days is information on how to tell an egg's age.

At last, contracts are let on The Dailies-California highway. Now, let's go.

Aren't you glad you burn wood instead of coal?

WANTS FAIR IN BEND.

To the Editor:
Referring to your editorial in The Bend Bulletin with regard to the establishment of a county fair and its location in Deschutes County, I wish to say that if the world was on exhibition at any fair it would be a failure without a good attendance. Bend is the only place in the county that could draw a crowd necessary to make the county fair a success. There is no argument in favor of any other places.

CATTLE FEEDERS MUST USE MORE CARE THAN FORMERLY

Maximum Period That Most Feeders Can Contemplate This Year Is Five Months—Still Less Risk in Good Than in Plain Cattle for Average Man.

Are you going to feed any cattle this winter? If so, what kind of feed are you going to use? And what kind of cattle are you going to feed? Those questions have been asked persistently, one feeder of another, for the past several months wacresver cattle are commonly fed in the United States. Now the time has arrived for filling the feeding lots—the question is more insistent than ever.

It used to be the common practice, when corn was high in price to feed some roughage. If corn was low, the feeder could afford to feed it in larger quantities over a longer period. If he was going to feed ten in considerable quantities over a long period he was disposed to buy high-class cattle. If corn was high and the feeder felt that he had to use a larger portion of roughage, he was disposed to buy plainer, thinner cattle.

A Day of New Rules.

But just now all the old rules are upset. Feeders, in common with every-ferent individuals, at least one of them, however, is pretty general. The feeding period will have to be shorter than used to be considered desirable. The maximum period that most feeders can contemplate this year is said to be 150 days but preferably considerably less. That means, necessarily, that most feeders can not afford to "feed to a finish." It has been realized for a long time that every pound of weight put on at the end of a finishing period costs more than a pound put on earlier in the process. When every pound put on at any stage of the process is costing, as the feeder feels, too much, the old 6 to 8 months period of feeding is in the discard. It may come into play again on a new deal, but not while the cards are distributed as they are at present.

It used to be standard advice that only animals of good quality should be used, as they sell for a higher price and dress a higher percentage of beef.

The Department experts still say that the average feeder is taking less chance on a good steer than on a plainer one, but there are many feeders, especially the inexperienced, whom they advise to use the plainer kind. It just about sifts down to this expression from an old, experienced feeder: "A policy that is practical and profitable for one feeder may be wholly impracticable for another. Because one man buys only top feeders and feeds to a finish is no evidence that he is a better cattle man than his neighbor who buys a lower grade of cattle and does not feed to a finish." And that means, again, that every feeder is advised to analyze his own situation with the greatest care that he can give to it, that he avail himself of whatever aid the county agent can give, that he obtain the special information available from his State agricultural college and experiment station, and from the United States Department of Agriculture.

System in Guessing.

The whole matter is much of a guess, as everybody admits. But there is a good deal of system, not to say science, in good guessing. With the variation in sizes of beans, thickness of glass and other things, it is still enough of a guess, but the guesser is not going it absolutely blind. The farmer whose profits for the year depend largely on how he comes out on the cattle he feeds should be at least as systematic a guesser as the fellow who takes a gamble on a jar of beans.

HEN HEALTH HINT.

Remember that it is much easier to keep birds healthy and well than to cure them after they are sick. Guard against disease by giving the fowls and chicks proper care at all times. Keep in mind the following: Lice, mites, filth, poor feed, dirty water, damp houses, drafts, and lack of care and attention breed disease. Sunlight, fresh air, clean houses and runs, good feed, fresh water, and good care and attention mean health, vigor, and profits.

Chickens will not give adequate returns in eggs or growth when kept under insanitary conditions.

Remove the soil from houses having dirt floors and haul in clean sand, sandy loam, or ashes. A general fall clean-up will mean greater winter egg production.

If the chickens must be confined on account of bad weather, provide a good straw litter in which their grain feed may be scattered. This will give them exercise and keep them interested and healthy. When chickens that have been accustomed to free range are closely confined, this frequently checks their development for the time being unless they are made contented in their new quarters.

Meaning of "Setah."

The word Setah, which occurs so frequently in the Psalms, is usually believed to be a direction to the musicians who chanted the Psalms in the temple. Matthewson, the great musical critic, wrote a book on the subject, in which, after rejecting a number of theories, he came to the conclusion that it is equivalent to the modern "cappo," and is a direction that the air or song is to be directed from the commencement to the part where the word is placed.
