GRAND JURY TO PROBE CHARGE KRUG MURDER

turned two hours later. On arising the next morning, they smelled the odor of burned flesh, and Weston opined that it must come from the Krug cabin, three-quarters of a mile distant, the witness said, and confirmed his theory by visiting the scene of the fire.

That evening after the inquest Weston related to Stillwell and Wilson that he had burned the house, first torturing his 70-year-old victim in a vain endeavor to make him disclose the hiding place of his money, and killing him when the attempt proved fruitless, according to the testimony. Weston had proposed to Still several days before that they go to Krug's cabin and get his money, and on being met with a refusal, declared that he would go himself, the witness said. After his revelation, Weston threatened to kill his confidant if he imparted the information to anyone else, and it was then that Stillwell first believed the gruesome story.

Moonshining Story Told.

Wilson gave a new angle to the case when he said that he, with Stillwell and Weston, had been making whiskey, that Krug had caught Weston working at the still, and that after the inquest Weston had given this as one reason for killing the old man. As they walked home from the inquest, Weston said to Wilson: "Mum's the word," the witness testified.

Interesting side lights on the precautions taken by liquor makers to avoid detection were given by the witness under cross-examination. After the fire, he said, the trio engaged in the manufacture of whiskey ceased their activities for a time, but set up poles around the mill and strung threads around them. "Then, if anyone were investigating, he'd break the threads, and we'd know about it," he explained.

"This is all very interesting, but I can't see that it has anything to do with the case," H. H. De Armond, for the prosecution, remarked. "The whiskey may be all gone now."

"Yes, but I've got some more," declared Wilson, and a look of relief was noted on many faces in the courtroom.

Wilson quoted the defendant as telling of going to Krug's cabin, knocking the aged recluse on the head with a club, binding him and choking his victim and roasting the helpless man's feet in the fireplace in the effort to obtain money. Weston refused a $500 check, Wilson said, but "if the old man had the money, he'd sooner go the route," he quoted.

Says Speedy Death Asked.

"If you're going to kill me, do it now," Krug appealed to Weston, the witness said. He was interrupted in his testimony at this point by a derisive laugh from Mrs. Weston, who, a moment later leaned over the table separating her from her husband and winked at him when Wilson told of Krug's death.

Wilson said that he had asked Weston why he had not placed the body near the door before firing the house, so that it would at least appear as if an attempt to escape had been made, and that the answer had been: "I should have, but I didn't think of everything."

Weston had explained the loss of a hardwood stick used at the mill to slip belting on and off a drive wheel by declaring that it had "gone up in smoke across the creek," said the witness. Wilson also declared that he had found a note for several hundred dollars in Weston's vest, drawn by W. E. Fuller to R. H. Krug. Before this Wilson had been warned against talking he said.

Persistent cross-examination failed to shake either of the witnesses in the essentials of their story.

Weston was arrested Thursday by Deputy Sheriff Adams as the result of an investigation conducted by Sheriff S. E. Roberts lasting over the past year and a half. The defendant was arraigned before Justice of the Peace J. A. Eastes Friday morning.

BEST BROILERS FOR MARKET

Squabs Should Weigh When Dressed From Three-Fourths to One Pound Each.

The market demand is for broilers of three sizes: Squab broilers weighing, when dressed, from three-fourths to one pound each; small broilers weighing from one to one and one-fourth pounds each, and large broilers weighing from one and one-half to two pounds each.

At the age of six months the increased weight is slight and the quality poor. As the age of the cockerel increases above 12 weeks the quality decreases materially.

Asbestos.

The earliest use of asbestos was for spinning and weaving, to make incombustible thread and yarn rope and cloth, and this has continued to be the most important use of asbestos ever since the days of the Greeks and Romans. Only the best grades can be used for this purpose, according to the United States geological survey, department of the interior. Thread can now be spun so fine that it will run about 32,000 feet to the pound.

MAKE SURE EGGS ARE FRESH

Method Generally Employed by Commission Houses for Purpose is Known as "Candling."

When supplying a fancy trade with eggs, or on receiving eggs from outside sources, it is often desirable to determine their freshness. The method generally used by commission merchants for this purpose is known as "candling," and consists in holding the egg between the eye and a light so as to note the contents. This should be done in a darkened room, using one of the egg testers on the market or simple home-made tester. The air space in a perfectly fresh egg is very small, and as the egg loses part of its contents by evaporation this air space increases in size with the age of the egg. Fresh eggs should appear clear and bright, showing no dark spots. Those accustomed to "candling" soon learn to detect stale eggs with a good degree of accuracy and rapidity.

Another method employed by some who have not a great number to test is to put the eggs in a basin of water. If good they will lie on their sides; if bad they will stand on the small ends. The older the egg the more upright it stands, and if very old it will be suspended in the water or even float on the surface.

Lines to Be Remembered.
Thought takes man out of servitude into freedom.—Emerson.

Spines of Porcupine.

The spines of a porcupine, in the usual position, lie nearly flat, with their points directed backward, but when the animal is excited they are capable of being raised. The quills are loosely inserted in the skin and may, on being violently shaken, become detached, a circumstance which probably gave rise to the purely fabulous statement that the animal possesses the power of actually ejecting its quills like arrows or darts at an enemy.

It Has a Good Name.

In the yellow adders' tongue, which John Burroughs has poetically styled "fawn lily," there is a twofold appropriateness of name, says the American Forestry Magazine of Washington, for the erect leaves have well been likened to the ears of a startled deer, while the mottled colors, with a distinct fawn color more or less in evidence on the outside of the miniature yellow lines, easily suggest the name.

Nature's Bookkeeping.

D. F. R. sends us this "brief scenario for a wheeze," as he calls it. "In the spring air is highly charged with fragrance, but we humans get it all for a scent."—Boston Transcript.
