THE ELECTION

Dissatisfaction with Wilson, distrust of Cox and confidence in Harding have combined to sweep the republican candidate into the White House by one of the greatest victories recorded in American history. Until final analyses have been made and allowances for the votes cast by the newly enfranchised women taken into account, general comment is impossible, but it now can be said that the country has overwhelmingly repudiated the democratic pretensions and endorsed Warren G. Harding.

Whether this means a complete repudiation of the League of Nations covenant we think is still a question. Too many other issues entered into the decision between the candidates. When Mr. Harding announces his plan for a league and the country has an opportunity to register its opinion on that plan will be the time to answer the question.

The Bulletin congratulates Mr. Gilson on his victory and promises its hearty cooperation in working for Bend. The council is a composite of the two tickets and the independent candidates and is clearly the choice of the people as distinct from the ticket makers. It has a big future before it and a big opportunity. We bespeak for it the same cooperation and interest that the people have shown in electing its various members.

With many of the county precincts still to hear from, nothing can be said as to the county results, but even were the votes all counted there would be little to say because the quiet campaign meant no issues. Apparently party lines were meaningless. That, at the present time, is the chief thing of interest in the county election.

PRAISE FOR PUTNAM

Friends of G. P. Putnam, formerly publisher of The Bulletin, will be interested in the following reprint of an editorial which appeared in The Reporter of Midvale, Idaho, a few weeks ago:

"A fine example of wealth not spoiling one's usefulness in the world is the case of George Palmer Putnam, who has been writing a series of special articles during the past few months on the acute situation in Poland for the Curtis Publishing Co. of Philadelphia. These articles have appeared mainly in the Ladies' Home Journal.

"A brief account of George Putnam's achievement will no doubt be of interest to Reporter readers, for it was in the Pacific Northwest that his ability and writings first gained recognition. He is a son of the senior member of the great Putnam Publishing Co. house of New York city and is barely 35 years of age. Six months after graduating from Yale, in the spring of 1909, instead of being content with chasing little rubber balls, along with the rest of the boys and girls in 'our set,' over some big golf links near that city, the latter part of December of that year found him en route to the Pacific coast. In order to reach his destination he had to patronize a horse stage line a distance of about 125 miles, in the dead of winter—landing at Bend, in Central Oregon. Two days afterward he had become the editor and owner of The Bend Bulletin. Bend, too, then was a town about the size of Midvale, but it will be recalled that at that time the Hill and Harriman railway interests were having a neck-and-neck race up the big Deschutes canyon in the endeavor to reach the heart of Central Oregon first, and thousands of people were coming into that vast section daily. Due to Putnam's ability and energy, The Bulletin sprang into popularity almost at once, and within a few months the Portland Oregonian had engaged him for a series of articles on Central Oregon. No annual number of that great journal during those years was considered complete without some write-up by him. The Oregon Trunk and O.-W. R. & N. lines reached Bend almost at the same time in October, 1911, but even before that time, due to Putnam's writings, it was the best advertised town east of the Cascades. When the late James B. Withycombe was chosen governor of Oregon in November, 1914, he selected George Palmer Putnam as his secretary, and when the latter turned The Bulletin over to the care of his managing editor before leaving for the state capital, from a plant equal to about half of that the Reporter it had grown to be the best printing establishment in Central Oregon. Mr. Putnam resigned from his position as secretary to the governor in the spring of 1916, sold The Bulletin and left for the East.

"The writings of Mr. Putnam have always been marvels of simplicity, beauty and directness, while his style reminds one strongly of that of the late Richard Harding Davis. His many friends in the Pacific Northwest are watching his career with interest and pleasure.

Coxey's army got to Washington. Cox's did not.

Bryan was not knocked into a Coxed hat. Where was he all the time, anyway?

Wonder how Cox would have done if he had not made any speeches?

DESCHUTES SCHOOL SCENE OF CARNIVAL

DESCHUTES, Nov. 4.—The carnival held at the school house Halloween was a great success. Mr. Thompson, county school superintendent, exhibited pictures with a machine which he stated belonged to the county and is to be used for educational purposes. A number of recitations followed.

Then dainty Japanese maidens served delicious tea at the tea garden, while an old witch told fortunes in her tent. The three eyed dog vied with the fish pond in popularity. Coffee and doughnuts were also served. About $10 was cleared above all expenses which will be used to buy a picture for the school room. Mrs. Mabel Connolly who is now employed by the Miller Lumber com-

Are You Fond of Hiking?
We are told that there is an old Greek legend that Eucides, several centuries before the time of Christ, in Attica, established a pedestrian record that has never since been beaten. Eucides was a messenger who, being sent from Athens to bring some holy fire from Delphos, made the journey there and back—125 miles in all—on the same day.

In One Direction Around World.
A person starting on the equator on a trip around the world would go east all the way providing he started east. He would not go east half the way and west the other half. If the journey is started toward the west that direction would be maintained until reaching the starting point again.

About Heaven.
There is a well-known story about a child being told that animals don't go to heaven, whereupon she inquired how heaven could flow with milk and honey if there were no cows there to supply the milk. A new modern youngster, on being told the same thing remarked "Then what's the use of goin' if we have to go the bad place every morning for our milk."—Boston Transcript.

Approaching the Millennium.
Jud Tunkins says there can't be any universal prosperity until a man is willing to work as hard for a square meal as he is for a circus ticket.

Instead of Sheep.
Normally, says Dr. Geoffrey Keyes, a person has 15,000 millions of blood corpuscles circulating in his body. People suffering with insomnia might try counting them in bed.—London Punch.
