COW TESTING

The work of testing the dairy cows of Deschutes county for tuberculosis has been finished, the reactors killed and their owners settled with according to the provisions of the Oregon law. Aside from range stock 98 per cent of the cows of the county have been tested. We do not know just how many reactors were found in this number but the statement is made that of the cows raised in the county not one was affected. In other words, all the animals in which disease existed had been brought in from other points. As a test to ascertain the condition of range stock several herds were examined and in no case was a single reactor found.

The conclusion to be drawn from this work is clear. Here in Central Oregon conditions are ideal for the production of dairy stock and range cattle so far as animal tuberculosis is concerned. The high altitudes and abundant sunshine insure a freedom from this disease in native stock that is of the utmost value. The introduction of the disease comes only through cows imported from other sections, chiefly the Oregon coast counties.

Under these conditions there is just one thing to do and that is to provide for such examination of stock proposed to be brought into the county as will insure the elimination of any not absolutely free from tuberculosis. The dairy men of the county owe it to the users of their products to keep their animals healthy and it is only good business for themselves to see to it that any stock they buy is in good condition. Examination and certification at the point of shipment will protect them and the county.

THE COUNTY NURSE

The question, "what does the county nurse do?" is one so frequently asked that official information on this subject cannot but be general interest. The following facts are furnished from state public health nursing headquarters.

Everyone who has a child in school knows of the "school nurse"—well, the school inspecting is one important branch of the work. There are many home calls to school children's parents for various reasons—some to explain the necessity of having Johnnie's defects attended to, others because "Mother wants to see the school nurse."

Then there is the child of the pre-school age, especially those under three years, to be looked after. It is astonishing how few mothers understand or appreciate the value of good, plain food, plenty of fresh air and rest for children—not to mention "bringing baby up."

The expectant mother has always been glad to see and talk with the nurse. The nurse explains to her the wisdom of being under a physician's care and helps her to get ready for the coming event.

It is one of the greatest satisfactions in a Public Health Nurse's life to see the look of relief on the family faces when she comes to give actual bedside care to one of their loved ones. While doing it she gradually instructs some capable member of the family in the care of the invalid. It is great to note the interest with which the younger members of the household watch the new baby getting its bath.

The Public Health Nurse visits those suffering with tuberculosis—either active cases or those who have been exposed to it. She instructs the family how to care for the sick one and how to prevent others from taking the disease.

How about contagion? Here again the Public Health Nurse has her work to do. It is her duty to aid the Health Officer to prevent contagion in any way she can. If you know of any filthy condition where flies and disease (which are inseparable) are rampant, tell the nurse about it and she in turn will get in touch with the Health authorities. Don't forget the "other fellow" if you are suffering with a communicable disease.

Besides all these phases of the work, there could be much done in the way of expansion; health clubs, home nursing classes, little mothers' leagues, clinics of various kinds, exhibits, etc.

Fifteen Years Ago

(From the columns of The Bend Bulletin of August 31, 1906.)

Work on the Arnold ditch has been carried on diligently all summer, and its promoters are planning to complete it some time this fall or early winter.
