Well-Populated "Villages."
The distribution of the population of China is a curious thing to contemplate, says Eleanor Franklin Egan, in the Saturday Evening Post. A hundred thousand people may be gathered together within what might rightly be regarded as city limits, but on the map their city will be indicated as a mere village that is not worth considering. Moreover, they will not have established a single feature of city organization. Villages of 100,000 inhabitants are rather difficult to visualize, but they exist in China.
