Good Effect of Brief Absence. I am not sure if the ladies understand the full value of the influence of absence, nor do I think it wise to teach them, lest they should resume the humor of the women of yore of sending their lovers into banishment. Distance, in truth, produces in ideal the same effect as in real perspective. Objects are softened and rounded and rendered doubly graceful; the harsher and more ordinary points of character are mellowed down and those which are remembered are the more striking outlines that mark sublimity, grace or beauty.—Walter Scott.

Forest and Sea. A forest is nature's expression of the idea of the home. The home signifies an interior, and the forest and a Gothic church emphasize the interior; while in the sea (as we have noted) and in the Greek temple, the exterior is the particular manifestation. The ocean suggests homelessness, and the ancients had no home. The home came from the forest races. A forest means shelter, protection, and stands for the individual's right to quiet and seclusion.

Half City, Half Desert.

On the Gulf of Aden is a spot of barren sand where a city springs up every winter and almost disappears in the summer. This place is called Berbera. A market is held there every winter and during the height of trading it becomes a city of rude huts and tents with a population of over 20,000. During the summer the place is deserted.

The Curate's Bags.

Young Curate—The other thing, my dear friends, I should like to mention is that next Sunday, the—ah—collection will be taken in a new pair of bags which Miss Sweetie Dove has made for me.—Sheffield Telegraph.

Man Really Dependable.

People who are all effort and not mentally dependable, who have no fixity of purpose, and are not reliable, are not the men we turn to in emergencies. It is the self-confident man, the man who feels sure of himself, the man who is sure of his philosophy and of his principles, the man of great faith, on whom we depend in supreme crises, when others are driven to the wall.—Exchange.

A Recipe.

To avoid a colorless existence, keep in the pink of condition; do things up brown; treat people white, be well read, and get out onto the golf green under the blue occasionally.
