DENIES KLAN IS POLITICAL BODY

Hooded Order Not Against Anybody, Lecturer Tells Audience Here

The Ku Klux Klan isn't against the Catholic, the negro, or the Jew. It doesn't even take part in politics. It's just a great, high minded organization, animated by the most lofty of ideals, seeking to uplift mankind. Many among the large audience who gathered at the American Legion building Friday night to be uplifted at two bits a lift might not have believed these statements, recalling statements of other lecturers, and Oregon's experience of the past year, but Dr. A. Austin Hull, advertised as an authorized klan lecturer, said that it was so.

The klan came into being, the lecturer stated, because the division among the Protestant churches of America, and their fear of getting into public affairs had made them unequal to the task of ridding the nation of vice. The klan, he said, has proved equal to this task. He had prayed for just such an organization, he told his hearers.

The name Ku Klux Klan, adopted by the secret order of today, not to be confused with the hooded knights of the reconstruction period in the south, was taken to attract attention, said Austin. It is a great, loyal body, leading the Christian life, and the regalia affected by its members is symbolic, not to conceal the identity of the wearers, he said.

Reports that the klan is anti-Catholic, anti-Jew, or anti-negro, were characterized by the speaker as propaganda. Unlawful acts attributed to the klan were not done by the klan because the klan didn't do them, he lucidly explained. He declared that there has never been a case of a klanman being sent to jail.

Hull was bitter in his attacks on the newspapers of the country. "The press has sold out to the devil," he asserted. "It is impossible to get the truth about the klan in the press. The klan is not afraid of the searchlight of truth."

As to the klan's getting into politics, or trying to take the reins of government, that's more propaganda, said Hull. The klan merely wants to put the right men into office and see that they do "the right thing" after they are in, he qualified.

Hull concluded his lecture with the warning: "If you don't want to get on board, don't get in the way; you might get run over."

Experts Now on High Desert To Wage War On Blacktails And Save Feed For Cattle

Laden with many ounces of strychnine sulphate, A. W. Moore and Roy Fugate, U. S. biological survey experts, arrived in Bend Tuesday morning from headquarters in Portland, and left before noon with County Agent W. T. McDonald to start a war of extermination against the high desert jackrabbits of the Brothers section. Moore will remain in the county for a week, after which time Fugate will be in charge of the poisoning campaign.

Haystacks in the Brothers country have been suffering from the attacks of famished rabbits, especially since the coming of the snow. One rancher shot 25 in the half hour before dusk a few days ago, and the next morning bagged as many more. The poisoning campaign has been inaugurated in response to appeals from stockmen who declared that if the pests were not controlled, they would be left without feed for their cattle for the remainder of the winter.

Moore and Fugate have just finished a gopher poisoning campaign in Polk county in which they ridded 11,000 acres in two solid blocks of some 14,000 pocket gophers.

The county agent asks that residents of any section which is suffering from jackrabbits notify him at once at his office in Redmond, or through the Bend Commercial club, while the biological survey experts are still in the country.

MOST OF FIRES CAUSED BY MAN

Forest Service Efficient in Fighting Flames, Figures Reveal

Campers and smokers caused 53 fires in and adjacent to the Deschutes national forest during the season of 1922, and damaged 799.61 acres of timbered land, figures compiled at forest headquarters show. The total acreage of man-caused fires was 2,079.61 acres. This acreage as compared with the total acreage of the entire forest is small, but the fact remains that out of a total of 74 fires, which burned a total of 2,173.19 acres, 54 fires which burned 2,079.61 acres were man-caused and therefore preventable.

Lightning caused 14 fires with a total acreage burned of 7.38, and six fires of unknown origin damaged 23.1 acres.

The promptness with which these fires were controlled is responsible for the comparatively small acreage burned. For instance, the average acreage of all fires when reached was 10.22 acres. The average acreage burned over was 29.36 acres per fire. The average time from the discovery of a fire until information as to its location was in the hands of the fire fighters was 5.69 minutes. The time from the report of a fire until the fire fighters were on their way was 12.96 minutes, while the average time from start to arrival at the fire was 2.8 hours.
