'Birdwatchers' back at cape for launching

CAPE CANAVERAL (UPI) America's birdwatchers, that hardy breed which forsakes living room television sets to stand under the burning sun to watch the nation's space ventures, were back on the beaches en masse todav

Undaunted after standing for hours in the wind-driven spray of the sea Tuesday, many returned to the beaches early this morn-ing to watch this nation's second attempt to launch L. Gordon Coo-per on a mission that would send him around the earth 22 times. Many of the rocket watchers,

Many of the rocket watchers, sometimes called "space nuts" by the less enthusiastic, admit they are trapped by the drama of America's most ambitious space project to date. Leo Pecsi, a soldier from Camden, N.J., said he and his wife would be back on the beach to-

day. "After coming all this way, we can't go home now," said Pecsi, who had asked for special leave from his post in Atlanta to view the launching. Mrs. George Pyeatt of Port-land, Ore., sat in her car through-out the night be to on hand for the first attempt to launch Coo-

"I saw the other launchings from my comfortable bed at home," she said, "and I could have seen this one here if they had installed auxiliary radar. After all the billions they spend on this program, you'd think they

Most who lined the beaches or Monday night and Tuesday morn-Monday nght and Tuesday morn-ing to see the launching were dis-appointed by the postponement but Mrs. E. H. Rhame of Sa-vannah, Ga., pretty well summed up their attitude: "It's an awful letdown," she said, "to come to be the solut hunde and here nothing happen, but for the safety of the man, I think it is worth
