Cooper undergoes further tests, Washington ceremony Tuesday

CAPE CANAVERAL (UPI)—Astronaut L. Gordon Cooper undergoes further medical tests and additional debriefing today before leaving for Washington Tuesday where he will receive the Distinguished Service Medal for his historic 22.9 orbit flight around earth.
The slightly built Air Force major was relaxed and smiling during Sunday's tumultuous tribute to his 575,000 mile space voyage.
Wednesday, Cooper will be honored with a ticker-tape parade in New York. Plans called for him to ride in a convertible up lower Broadway through the financial district to city hall where he will be given a reception.
Sunday, Cooper described his breathtaking flight—probably the last manned space voyage by the United States for 18 months—as firm proof man can sleep, eat and live for long periods in space.
He told of seeing vivid geographic details, sleeping soundly, eating on schedule although he was not too hungry and performing numerous experiments assigned to him.
"Really No Problem"
Cooper described his blazing "fireball" re-entry under manual control, an emergency step that was necessary after the automatic system failed in the 20th orbit and caused anxious concern around the world.
"There was really no problem," he said.
There had been speculation that still another one-man space flight in the Project Mercury series might be held later this year but a top official of the federal space agency said it seemed "quite unlikely."
The statement by Dr. Robert C. Seamans, associate director of NASA, apparently meant the next U.S. manned space flight will not come until October, 1964, at the earliest.
Seamans said a definite decision on whether there would be another Mercury flight, "must be made within the next week or so."
He described the Cooper flight as "apparently . . . most successful" and that "it seems unlikely there will be another Mercury mission."
If there are not more Mercury flights, next comes Project Gemini—a program to put up two-man teams of astronauts into orbit for periods of up to two weeks.
The first manned Gemini flight is due sometime during the last three months of 1964.
"Although we still have a long way to go in the exploration of space," Seamans said, "I doubt that we can find an astronaut who can improve on the performance of Gordon Cooper."
Cooper was asked what he thought the flight proved about man's role in space.

"I think we proved man is a pretty good backup system to all these automatic systems," he replied.
To other questions, Cooper said: "The horizon was always clear, both day and night" from his capsule.
—"Flashing satellites" which he dropped from behind his capsule as a visual aid check "would be a good device to help on the nightside for a rendezvous in space between two orbiting capsules. He last saw the lights at a distance of about 17 or 18 miles from his position.
—"An 'exercise device' in his Faith 7 took "almost as much exercise to get at it as to use it."
He said he first noticed the tremendous view as Faith 7 flashed over the Arabian Peninsula in the Middle East.
"I could see roads and rivers, and trucks on the roads. I saw a train with smoke coming out of it."
"I even saw a boat going down the river, and the wake behind it. But I couldn't see individual people."
He said he could see Dallas, Tex., and the area of the federal space agency headquarters in Houston.
"But I couldn't see my own house," he laughed. "They put up too many trees around it."
He said Red China "looked just like it looks on the map. I couldn't see anything but just a lot of country. Part of China was covered by broken clouds."
He said the "really beautiful view" however, was during three swings he made right over the snow-capped Himalaya Mountains between India and China.
