Anti-segregation leaders organizing demonstrators

By United Press International

Anti-segregation leaders today organized more demonstrations for the weekend in at least two southern cities while a Dixie governor prepared to take his arguments for racial barriers north.

Above the Mason-Dixon line, Negro spokesmen and contractors in Philadelphia had reached an agreement ending protests against job discrimination that led to a battle between pickets and police.

In Washington, the Justice Department worked on new civil rights legislation which President Kennedy is expected to propose to Congress next week.

And in New York, fresh pleas for integration were issued by the World Council of Churches and the president of a huge restaurant chain.

Some highlights of the racial situation: Jackson, Miss.: Police arrested 421 Negro demonstrators late Friday and drove them in trucks to makeshift prisoner compounds on the state fairground. Most were students ranging in age from 12 to 21 who met a human blockade of helmeted officers on a march toward the downtown section. They were charged with parading without a permit. More demonstrations were imminent.

Tallahassee, Fla.: Negro students, fresh from a court victory, stayed off the streets of the state capital Friday night but planned to resume picketing of all-white theaters today. A circuit court judge dismissed contempt charges against 220 students arrested on Thursday night for such picketing, and gave them permission to continue demonstrating—in limited numbers. "This is a great and sweeping victory for the Negro," an attorney for the integrationists said.

Montgomery, Ala.: Gov. George Wallace, pledged to block the enrollment of two Negroes at the University of Alabama June 10, flies to New York today for a television appearance Sunday. The fiery Wallace also continued to play a cat-and-mouse game with U.S. marshals, who want to serve him with a subpoena for a federal court hearing Monday aimed at preventing him from interfering with integration at the university. State troopers Friday formed a human chain around Wallace to block serving of the subpoena.

Philadelphia: Two policemen were stabbed and six pickets were slugged with blackjacks during a melee Friday at the construction sites of two schools. None were seriously hurt. After 200 policemen quelled the disturbance, officials of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, unions, contractors and the school board announced that an agreement had been reached for hiring five Negro workers at the sites and organizing a committee to map a program for hiring more.

Washington: The Justice Department continued work on two measures aimed at speeding up desegregation of schools and reducing racial barriers at most public business establishments. The other would empower the attorney general to initiate suits on behalf of Negroes, thus reducing the time spent on litigation. The Senate Judiciary Committee plans to resume hearings Wednesday on civil rights bills.

Sacramento, Calif.: A group of whites and Negroes, protesting lack of legislative action on a fair housing bill, spent the night inside the state Capitol and expected reinforcements for their sit-in. The demonstration started Wednesday.

Memphis, Tenn.: A federal judge hears motions today calling for the immediate desegregation of schools in Jackson, Tenn., and Madison County, Tenn.

Athens, Ga.: The first two Negroes to attend the University of Georgia line up with other graduating seniors to receive their diplomas today.

Holiday traffic — way of life in U.S.

NEW YORK (UPI)—The bumper-to-bumper stream of autos clogging the nation's highways this Memorial holiday weekend will produce tragedy, exasperation and frustration, but it represents a way of life that has made America's economy the envy of the world.

As the auto industry goes so goes the economy may be overstating the case, but it is becoming increasingly evident that what is good for that industry is good for the country.

Within this context the statement this week by General Motors Chairman Frederic Donner that sales of 7 million cars a year has become "the normal yardstick" for the auto industry certainly bodes well for the future business outlook.

Sales Climbing

Going one step farther GM's President John Gordon recently stated: "We could be looking at a situation not long from now when 8 or 9 million car sales a year will be normal."

Danger of water shortage noted

SPECIAL TO THE BULLETIN

MADRAS — Danger of an extreme shortage of water for late season irrigation in the North Unit Irrigation District of Jefferson county was predicted this week by NUID officials after a survey of storage water at the Wickiup Reservoir which supplies the district.

The survey revealed that the water supply, due to unusually heavy early season demand and lack of runoff water for the early irrigation, is dropping the water supply at a higher than normal rate.

Last year, Wickiup started the irrigation season with 195,000 acre feet in storage. At this date last year the reservoir held 191,000 acre feet.

By comparison, this year, Wickiup started the irrigation with 200,600 acre feet of stored water, more than was available last year but this week the reservoir held only 179,000, considerably below the 191,000 acre feet of last year on the same date.

NUID spokesmen explained that the rapid decrease in stored water is due mostly to the fact that there has been practically no river flow water for use by the NUID. Almost all of the water used so far this season has been tapped from stored facilities.

"The district urges extreme care be used in irrigating and that water users take advantage of any conservation tactics they can," district spokesmen emphasized.

NUID officials said the system is now running at capacity and it appears it might be necessary to limit the amount of water delivered to the users unless some cutbacks are made.

Water came into the district on April 8, a day later than last year.

Four Bend minors were picked up by city police last night and detained on after-hours charges. One 16-year-old girl is charged with using an auto without the owner's permission. All have been released to their parents and will await action by juvenile authorities.
