

Time short for tax petitions

By Zan Stark
UPI Staff Writer
SALEM (UPI) — The Citizens Committee for Economy and Equitable Taxation isn't going to have much time in which to circulate petitions to refer the legislature's tax increase.

The group, headed by J. Francis Howard, editor of weekly newspapers in Albany and Corvallis, isn't getting any help from the governor or legislative leaders.

Informed sources predict Gov. Mark Hatfield will send the $60 million revenue increase measure to the secretary of state next Wednesday without signature. This is the deadline by which Hatfield must either sign measures, or let them become law without his signature.

A measure must be referred within 90 days of the end of the legislative session. The deadline is Sept. 2.

If Hatfield lets the measure become law without signature next Wednesday, 23 days already will have elapsed.

Jack Thompson, elections supervisor for the secretary of state, said the tax measure will be forwarded to Atty. Gen. Robert Y. Thornton as soon as he receives it. Thornton has 10 days in which to prepare a ballot title and statement of purpose.

During this period Howard has to re-file his referral notice, because his original petition was filed last Monday, before the measure became law.

After Thornton assigns the ballot title, there is a 20-day period during which his title may be appealed. The full process could take up as many as 53 of the 90 days Howard's group has to circulate petitions.

But Howard's group may find 37 days is ample time. The last time a tax measure was referred it took only two weeks to get the necessary signatures.

Hatfield already is on record in opposition to referral because it would result in a special session of the legislature.

"If the legislature couldn't draft a better bill in 141 days, there's no reason to believe they could do better in a special session," he said.

House Speaker Clarence Barton told Oregon Newspaper Publishers in Coos Bay Friday that rejection of the tax package could result in "the worst rise in property taxes in Oregon history."

Intervention seen in spray controversy

OLYMPIA (UPI)—The Washington State Pollution Control Commission has a responsibility under the law to intervene in the controversial hemlock looper spraying project in Southwest Washington, Chairman Earl Coe said Friday.

The commission could decide to block the project or require the State Department of Resources to modify it in some way, he said.

Coe, who is also director of conservation, said he would attempt to schedule a meeting sometime next week to give the five-member commission a chance to take some action.

The natural resources agency plans to spray 70,000 acres of Pacific and Wahkiakum counties with DDT and Sevin insecticides in an effort to kill the hemlock looper, a small worm which department foresters estimate could cause $104 million worth of damage to timber.

Opponents of the project contend the spraying might kill fish, wildlife, shellfish and even humans as well as the loopers. They claim that not enough is known of the side-effects of the sprays.

C of C board backs host group plan

The board of directors of the Bend Chamber of Commerce voted Friday noon to support a group being organized to host visiting foreign diplomats in Central Oregon.

The proposal was presented to the board by Bill Dodge, who reported on an organizational meeting of the host group which he attended recently.

The program is being coordinated by Central Oregon College.

Most of the visitors, Dodge said, will be in the area about three days. He said it was not expected that there would be a sizable number of guests, adding that they are being brought to this country partly to combat Communist influence in their native countries.

Many of the diplomats, he said, will be from Africa.

The board members agreed on the value of the reception committee program and voted unanimously to give it Bend Chamber support.

Directors also heard reports from Pat Metke, Ashley Post and Freeman Schultz on the recent visit here of Harold E. Rose, assistant vice president of Newport Industries Division of the Hayden Newport Chemical Corporation.

The firm which Rose represents is preparing for a preliminary study of the feasibility of extracting chemicals from old pine stumps.

The speakers reported that Rose had been appreciative of arrangements by the Chamber for his visit and was able to make satisfactory plans for the tests in the local area.

President Gordon Randall presided at the luncheon meeting.

Face-lifting project due

Special to The Bulletin
PRINEVILLE — Bids for a general face-lifting of the second floor, Crook county courthouse, will be received in the office of county judge Ervin Grimes until 10 a.m., June 25.

The work to be done includes the laying of plywood subflooring, floor tile, painting the walls and repairing windows. No re-decorating has been done in the historic courthouse in many years on the second floor, and no major repairs have been made on the splintered and dented floor since 1908, Judge Grimes said.

In 1962, Judge Grimes supervised the lowering of ceilings, painting and installation of rubber matting on the third floor in the hall and in the circuit court room. Rubber matting was also placed over repaired steps from top to bottom in the three-story building at that time.

This year, it was noted, the decor of the second floor had become more historic than pleasant and the hard-used floor was in serious condition of deterioration. Funds for the project will be taken from the county emergency fund.

Armed forces cutback feared by McNamara

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara says the $47 billion defense appropriations bill is missing $140 million that will force a $600-million cut in the armed forces.

He also claims the House Appropriations Committee left the Defense Department short on money needed to buy fighter planes.

These were McNamara's two objections after the House committee passed the record defense spending measure almost intact Friday.

McNamara's complaints brought an immediate reply from Rep. George H. Mahon, D-Tex., chairman of the appropriations subcommittee which worked on the bill. He made clear he believed McNamara was misinformed.

But the defense secretary said he would fight in the Senate Appropriations Committee for restoration of the funds to the $47,022,200,000 measure, which amounts to roughly half of the entire federal budget for the fiscal year beginning July 1.

The House committee cut President Kennedy's request by $1.9 billion. But most of this reduction was in bookkeeping transactions that meant no actual spending cuts, and the committee cited its action as proving full support for the U.S. military program.

McNamara said in a statement, however, that cuts in military personnel funds "would result in a reduction of our military manpower by some 60,000 men as of the end of the next fiscal year."

Mahon replied that the Defense Department always overestimated personnel costs, and the committee's report called for manpower to be held at the 2,695,000-man goal set by the President.

On the fighter planes, McNamara referred to "proposed cuts in the procurement of Air Force tactical fighter aircraft which would deny us necessary tactical support for our combat-ready Army divisions."

Mahon asked what fighter plane McNamara had in mind, and was told it was the RF4C, a reconnaissance version of the F4C Phantom jet fighter.

The congressman said the committee's $25 million cut in research and development funds for the plane was based on McNamara's own reluctance to go into any big procurement project until problems in the plane's development have been solved.

More optimism noted after agreement on 'hot line'

GENEVA (UPI) — Parties to the Geneva disarmament conference looked to big power nuclear test ban talks slightly more optimistically Friday as a result of the agreement to establish a "hot line" communications link between Washington and Moscow.

Negotiators here planned to recess for six weeks today.

Conference sources said Thursday's successful conclusion of the first East-West disarmament accord since World War II indirectly boosted hopes for a nuclear agreement at the three-power test ban talks scheduled in Moscow next month. The prospects also went up for other measures to reduce the risk of war by accident.

U.S. Ambassador Charles C. Stelle acknowledged the qualified optimism when he and Soviet negotiator Semyon K. Tsarapkin emerged from formal signing ceremonies. He was asked what the next Soviet-American agreement might be.

"We hope it will be a nuclear test ban," he replied while shaking hands with the Russian. Tsarapkin nodded vigorously in agreement.

U.S. sources said that technically it was possible to set up the 5,000-mile teletype circuit within 60 days. The circuit—"hot" in the sense that it will be always open—will enable President Kennedy and Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev to communicate instantly.

The "hot line" will connect the Kremlin with the Pentagon, and most probably the White House, via Helsinki, Stockholm and London. It will be reserved for government to government messages in the event of major world tension like the Cuban crisis last year.

Informed sources said the agreement was important both as a door to any further bilateral accords aimed at preventing accidental war, and as a confirmation of a slight thaw noted in Russia's disarmament position recently.

The sources said that despite the Kremlin's affirmation of its stand on inspections in any test ban treaty, the Russians have strongly resisted Chinese Communist attacks on Moscow's declared policy of "peaceful co-existence" with the West.

Recent reports from Moscow also have indicated an awakening Soviet interest in the possibility of a nuclear test ban treaty outlawing nuclear explosions in the atmosphere, outer space and under water only.

Last summer, the Communists angrily rejected such a draft treaty as a device to "legitimize" underground tests.
