

Hatfield to let tax boost become law sans signature

SALEM (UPI)—Gov. Mark Hatfield announced Tuesday he would let the 1963 legislature's $60 million tax increase package become law without his signature.

He said he didn't like it but that he didn't believe a special session of the legislature could do any better, and that it might do worse.

Hatfield made the announcement just before leaving for California to speak to the Young Republican convention in San Francisco.

Hatfield said, "A legislature that fails to provide a final budget and revenue program until a few hours before adjournment leaves the executive with virtually no alternative as to approval or disapproval of its actions."

The bill, he said, "compounds the inequities of the present impact of taxes on our citizens." But, the governor said, he was not convinced that reassembling the legislature would result in any improvement. "Indeed," he said, "the result could be worse."

A special session could result if the measure is referred to voters and beaten by them. Albany weekly newspaper editor J. Francis Howard has announced plans to lead a referendum.

The legislature provided for a special election Oct. 15 should enough signatures — 23,185 — be gathered to refer the tax program to voters.

Hatfield's statement said the legislature rejected the tax program he offered and added, "Oregon must one day face up to the need to overhaul our tax program, and the action taken by the legislature, as reflected in this bill, does precious little toward that necessary goal."

However, he said, "This bill must be allowed to become law so that orderly government can continue and so that essential public services can be provided."

Under the tax increase program a single person with a $5,000 income would pay an additional $33 a year in income taxes, a couple an additional $28, and a family of four an additional $23.

Court rules on protection fee

SALEM (UPI)—Assessing a one cent per acre forest fire protection tax is a legal exercise of the state's police power, the Oregon Supreme Court ruled today.

The decision came as the high court reversed a ruling of the Grant County Circuit Court of Judge E. H. Howell, which voided the assessment on the grounds the tax had been levied on realty not assessed on true cash value as required by the constitution.

The high court said: "The constitutional provision requiring uniformity of taxation does not restrict the state in its exercise of the police power as distinguished from the taxing power, because the primary purpose of the money exaction is not to raise revenue but to directly promote the public welfare."

"The one cent per acre levy was solely for fire protection and suppression."

The high court added: "If the state is required to exercise its police power because certain properties present a special threat to the safety of the state, those lands can be charged for the costs of this exercise of the police power. The lands against which the assessment was imposed in this case are those constituting a fire hazard and so present a special threat."

The court affirmed a decision by Marion County Circuit Judge George Jones denying post-conviction relief to James Q. Anderson, a member of the Klamath Indian tribe, who was convicted of second degree murder in 1955.

The plaque will be dedicated during a general "Glorious Fourth" rally at the courthouse steps at 11 a.m. July 4, following the parade. County Judge Ervin Grimes will give the dedicatory speech, and a location for the plaque was to be selected Tuesday at a committee meeting headed by Mrs. Dolly Fessler.

Mrs. Fessler has been spearheading the project to set the courthouse apart as a landmark. The plan has been cleared with the Oregon Historical Society.

Following the rally, bells and whistles will blow at noon for an extended time. A general community picnic will be held in the Pioneer park at 1 p.m., with coffee and punch to be furnished. Duane Allig, Jaycee president, is general chairman for the "Let Freedom Ring" celebration.

Other clinics are scheduled at later dates.

Recently, the city council approved vacation of an alley to permit the church property to occupy a full block, located on South Second Street, between Holly and Idlewood Streets. The building is to be 64x135 feet in overall dimensions according to the building permit application.

Hatfield says GOP must look for '64 'lions'

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—Republicans can stop talking about "sacrificial lambs" and start looking for "lions" in the 1964 Presidential race, Gov. Mark Hatfield of Oregon said today.

Things are so bad with the Kennedy administration now, he said in a speech to the Young Republican national convention, that Republicans are in an excellent position to win the election if they work hard enough.

Hatfield summed up the situation this way: "The unrest of Negroes, the distrust of white southerners, the potential powder keg of Haiti, the confusion over Cuba, the worsening youth employment picture, the eye-opening report of the Clay Committee on foreign aid, the loss of confidence of Canada, the eruption of relations with France, the stalemate in Laos, the bluff of the Berlin wall, the intensified activity of the Far Right, the farmer turndown of the wheat referendum, the squabbles over defense contracts, augur well for a Republican victory for its national ticket in 1964."

"A few months ago," he said, "a Kennedy victory seemed to far too many Republicans as inevitable. There was talk of sacrificial lambs."

"But today we are looking for lions and we have a number who can spell out the issues for what they are. We have had two and a half years of hesitation, waltz, of government by guess and by gum."

Hatfield urged Republicans to rally in support of their principles and to achieve unity within the party once the GOP standard bearers have been chosen.

He also urged attention to state and local races so that "when a Republican president walks in the White House in January of 1965 he will not only have a Republican Congress but Republican state houses across the land as well, supported by Republicans in the counties and in the legislatures."

Introduced as the new president of the group was Wally Boyd of Beaverton. He succeeds Richard W. Brandis, Bend, who headed the highly successful local convention. Charles Semling, St. Helens, was named vice president and Russ Austin, Portland, treasurer. Herman Forslund, Corvallis, was elected secretary.

Mrs. Louis Johnson, Portland, heads the OSPA Auxiliary in the coming year. The Auxiliary met here jointly with the OSPA and joined in many of the special entertainment features, ranging from golf to scenic trips.

Roger Smith, Bend, was convention chairman, assisted by Bud Rose, Duff McAndie, Malcolm Woodward and Ray Jabels.

One of the highlights of the final day of the convention was a talk by Ed Wimmer, vice president of the National Federation of Independent Business.

"You and the Law" was the topic of a panel discussion held by the group, with Wilbert Penberthy, district director of the bureau of narcotics as one of the panelists.

A cocktail party preceded the president's banquet. The convention opened Sunday afternoon, but most of the business sessions were on Monday and Tuesday.

HEADS PHARMACISTS — Wally Boyd, Beaverton, was elected president of the Oregon State Pharmaceutical Association at the concluding session here Tuesday morning. He takes over the position held this past year by Richard W. Brandis.

Beaverton man new president of pharmacists

Profuse in their praise of Bend hospitality and apparently in agreement that the convention held here earlier this week was one of the best in the 74-year-history of their group, members of the Oregon State Pharmaceutical Association concluded their 1963 convention last night with the president's banquet.

More range grass aim of research

Range management aimed at economic production of more beef from some 90 million acres of sagebrush-bunchgrass range in the western United States highlighted a special field day in Central Oregon, Tuesday.

More range grass for spring grazing and higher quality grass for late summer were among key goals reported by researchers at the Squaw Butte Experiment Station range field day.

Operated by Oregon State University and U. S. Department of Agriculture, the experiment station conducts research that applies directly to all or portions of the 11 western states.

W. A. Sawyer, station superintendent, pointed out that the research relates to about 20 million acres of eastern Oregon range.

Research reports got down to such hard-cash questions as possibilities of fertilizing range grasses with nitrogen, and the place of supplemental feed for yearling beef animals on summer range.

Another interest-catcher, still in the exploratory stage, was the prospect of "chemically curing" forage grasses to preserve their quality for late season grazing.

Reports were by Sawyer and station researchers F. A. Sneya, range conservationist; R. J. Raleigh, animal nutritionist; Joe D. Wallace, animal scientist; and C. B. Rumburg, agronomist. Ray Novotny, Harney county agent, also assisted with the field day that attracted ranchers and range technicians from throughout the region.

Studies on the amount and types of feed supplement required to maintain high summer-long gains of yearling beef animals on crested wheatgrass pinpointed a critical problem on the range: rapid late summer decline in feed value of crested wheat and the resulting slow-down in animal gains.
