THE LAST ROUNDUP

PITTSBURGH, Kan. (UPI) — Paul McPherson, a policeman, pleaded with the city council Friday to have lariats made part of police equipment.

He said they were needed to cope with a rash of stray horses which have been roaming on city streets. McPherson admitted that roping the animals would only half solve the problem.

"We also have trouble finding the owners," he said. "We may have to ask for a branding law so we can tell one horse from another."
