Central Oregon's pine producers are farmers, too . . .

Perhaps you've never thought of our beautiful timber resources as a crop. But forestry practices today closely parallel other enlightened farming methods. Timberlands are carefully cultivated, shielded from disease and selectively harvested in a never ending cycle. That makes us farmers - a term we proudly accept and a responsibility we will always fulfill. For through the increasingly knowledgeable management of our Central Oregon forest lands, we assure ourselves and our posterity of expanding timber yields . . . and a guarantee that this great natural resource will never be completed.
