Non-aggression pact might be worthwhile, JFK thinks

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy, confident the Senate will approve the test ban treaty, believes a non-aggression pact with the Soviet bloc also might be worthwhile if it provided "greater security for Berlin."

Kennedy told a news conference Thursday he thought it "advisable" for the NATO powers to discuss Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev's proposal for an East-West non-aggression agreement to see whether it would serve the interests of the West.

He also said he was ready to give France nuclear weapons and know-how if President Charles de Gaulle reversed his field and agreed to sign the limited test ban treaty and cooperate in "integration" of NATO forces—possibilities generally considered dim.

China Could Start War
Kennedy said Red China, dedicated to international war to spread communism, might well trigger World War III in the 1970s when Peking could become a nuclear power, unless some way is found to defuse the situation.

The President said he was confident, "when the testimony is all in," that the Senate would decide the treaty with Moscow outlawing air, space and underwater tests "provides protection for the security interests of the United States" and would ratify it.

He said the limited treaty provided "some hope of moving toward a more peaceful world," but he warned that the future was cloudy and there was nothing to warrant any relaxation of Western defense efforts or a reduction of the U. S. military budget.

Wouldn't Recognize State
Kennedy said signing of the treaty by Communist East Germany would not, under international practice, constitute recognition of the Soviet-occupied state by the United States or any of the other countries which have refused to establish relations with the Red regime.

There seems to be no "useful purpose" to be served by holding a summit conference with Khrushchev within the foreseeable future, Kennedy said.

The President said skilled negotiation such as that which resulted in the test ban agreement "is really the best way unless there is an overwhelming crisis or unless there is some new fact induced into the international situation which is not now visible which would make such a (summit) meeting desirable."
