

Closing of inland waters to commercial angling is sought by sportsmen

SALEM (UPI)—A sportsmen's group has filed preliminary petitions for an initiative to close all Oregon inland waters to commercial salmon and steelhead fishing. If the measure gets on the November, 1964, general election ballot and is approved by the people it would mean the end of commercial salmon fishing in the Columbia River.

The group must obtain 37,096 signatures on petitions by July 2, 1964, to bring the proposal to vote. The initiative is the latest in a long series of battles between sports and commercial fishermen.

Other Streams Barred In 1956, voters by a 401,882 to 359,309 margin approved an initiative which prohibited commercial fishing for salmon in all rivers except the Columbia.

Two years ago a sportsmen's attempt to restrict commercial fishermen from taking steelhead in the Columbia failed when the Oregon Supreme Court ruled many of the signatures on initiative petitions were invalid.

Many of the signatures were on petitions which carried a ballot title which the high court invalidated. It ruled they couldn't be counted.

Sponsor of the new initiative is Save our Salmon and Steelhead, Inc., a new corporation which is headed by Allan L. Kelly, president of the Oregon Izak Walton League.

Game Fish Under the petition, both salmon and steelhead would be classified as game fish in Oregon river waters.

Kelly said today that closure of Oregon rivers to commercial salmon and steelhead fishing is necessary because the fish runs are in jeopardy.

"It is time that this resource is considered solely for recreational uses. The personal recreational use of this fishery will bring the greatest benefits to the people of our state," he declared.

Atty. Gen. Robert Y. Thornton will have to prepare a ballot title. His title will be subject to challenge in the Oregon Supreme Court.

This is what happened in 1962 when commercial fishermen fought the Thornton title and got the Supreme Court to write a new one.

Dr. Green to resume study of mid-Oregon lava terrain

Geophysical studies of lava terrain in Central Oregon in connection with preliminary moonshot investigations are to be resumed this weekend under the supervision of Dr. Jack Green, lunar geologist who earlier this year probed the Derrick Cave of the Fort Rock country.

Dr. Green was in Bend today, and will be joined soon by a crew of three. A plane equipped with special instruments will be used in the present study, which will continue until August 18.

Two tons of steel rail will also be used, apparently in an effort to determine the value of a sky probe of the lunar surface. Apparently the rail will be "bundled" and placed in Derrick Cave, over which the plane, with gravity meters and other equipment will fly.

In one of his earlier studies, Dr. Green, who is with North American Aviation in Downey, Calif., investigated the interior of the Derrick Cave, and installed lights that reached back into the tunnel about a fourth of a mile.

The present plan is to set up a "density anomaly" in the Derrick Cave area, for use in connection with tests to be made from a low-flying plane.

The trip to Bend is a combined business and vacation venture for Dr. Green. He was accompanied
